1,457 ON BOARD LUSITANIA ARE ON THE LIST OF MISSING

ONLY 703 ARE KNOWN TO HAVE BEEN SAVED

PROMINENT AMERICANS AMONG THOSE LOST---DETAILS OF DISASTER AND TALES TOLD BY SURVIVORS

LONDON, May 8.---The admiralty has abandoned hope that any of the 1,457 passengers and sailors still missing have been rescued.

By Telegraph to The Freeman

London, May 8.—Known survivors of the Lusitania now total 703. The missing number 1,457 and it is feared the final death list of the great liner torpedoed by a German submarine off the south coast of Ireland yesterday afternoon will be in the neighborhood of that number.

The admiralty issued an announcement early today stating that only 658 persons were known to have been rescued. Seven hours later it issued another statement saying that 45 more survivors had reached Queenstown. The additional rescues were made by a drifter.

Reports as to the number of Americans who perished are conflicting, ranging from 60 to 144. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, Charles Klein and Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Hubbard have been given up for dead by their friends.

Anticipating that Germany will claim that the Lusitania was technically a warship, the admiralty issued a statement denying that the liner was armed.

The following dispatch from the U. S. consulate at Queenstown was received at the American embassy at 1:15 o'clock this afternoon:

"Captain Turner saved. Total number survivors at Queenstown 2 a. m. today 634. About 63 corpses landed, mostly unidentified. A dozen of them may be Americans."

London, May 8.—More than 1,400 men, women and children are still unaccounted for today and are believed to have perished when the Cunard liner Lusitania was torpedoed by a German submarine off the south south coast of Ireland yesterday afternoon.

Only 703 persons are known to have landed, the British admiralty announced early today. As Cunard officials state that there were 2,160 persons on board the Lusitania when she sailed a week ago today from New York, those unaccounted for number 1,457. The admiralty points out in its statement that all the rescue ships have not yet reported. Some survivors may have been landed at isolated points on the Irish coast.

Practically all the prominent Americans who sailed on the Lusitania were still unaccounted for when the admiralty issued its statement and it was feared that Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, Elbert Hubbard and Charles Klein had perished.

The American consul at Queenstown telegraphed shortly before noon that Mr. Vanderbilt has apparently been lost.

The admiralty statement announcing the rescue of 658 persons was as follows:

"A telegram received from the admiral at Queenstown says:

"'Torpedo boats, tugs and armed trawlers from Queenstown are all in except the Heron. Five hundred and ninety-five survivors and forty dead were landed from these boats. From another steamship fifty-two more survivors were landed. At Kinsale 11 survivors and five dead were landed. The total number of survivors known to have been landed is 658. Forty-five corpses are known to have been taken ashore. These numbers will be verified later. Fishing boats may have a few other survivors on board. Only a few of the first class passengers were saved. It is understood that they remained on board after the liner had been struck, thinking she would remain afloat. The Lusitania sank in 15 to 25 minutes after being torpedoed. It is reported that she was struck by two torpedoes. The Cunard agent places the total number of persons on board the Lusitania at 2,160. In addition to the foregoing figures it has just been signalled by wireless that an armed trawler, probably the Heron, and dtwo fishing trawlers are bringing in 100 bodies.'"

Many passengers were badly injured when the liner was torpedoed and some of these died in the hospital after being brought ashore. Others, rendered helpless by their wounds, quickly drowned when the ship went down and they were thrown into the water. The Germans are believed to have used special torpedoes of extra high power against the Lusitania. The missiles pierced the double skin of the great liner, tearing out the ship's vitals. The liner heeled over with such suddenness that the life boats on the side where the torpedoes had entered could not be launched. This was another factor that entered into the heavy loss of human life.

All the hospitals in Queenstown were soon filled and as the injured continued to arrive they were sent to the naval and military hospitals for treatment.

At Cork the same conditions prevailed, the hospitals being filled with injured men and women taken into port by tugs, trawlers and torpedo boat destroyers. Officers of the ships in the rescue fleet declared that the weather conditions were perfectly favorable otherwise the loss of life, appalling as it was, would have been much heavier.

Through the night so many alarming and sensational reports arrived from Kinsale, Queenstown and Cork that the government finally established a censorship, allowing only news of apparent authenticity to be distributed.

Every possible relief agency has been thrown open for the care of the survivors. The naval and military authorities are uniting with the civil authorities all along the southern Irish coast to give aid to those who escaped from the lost ship. George E. Chamberlain, the United States consul for Queenstown and Cork, is looking after the Americans.

Some of the Lusitania's passengers were killed outright by the explosion of the German torpedoes, declared survivors who were taken into Queenstown by the tug Stormcock. Among these survivors were frantic women, brought to the verge of madness by the horror of the scenes through which they had just passed. The calmer of the survivors took occasion to praise Captain W. T. Turner and his officers for the coolness they showed after the Lustania had been attacked. Officers and seamen exercised such calmness and were so emphatic in their reassurances, that despite the fact that the great liner was settling rapidly in the water, many were persuaded that the watertight compartments would save her from absolute loss.

It was about ten minutes after 2 and many of the first class passengers were at lunch when, apparently without warning, there was a jarring explosion that shook the giantess from stem to stern. Immediately there was another shock of greater severity than the first. The majestic greyhound keeled over so sharply that scores were thrown from their feet. There was a crash as though the boilers had exploded and the interior of the ship was filled with flying wreckage that left death and wounds in its wake. Fire broke out. Smoke rolled upward. Before the first stages of the inevitable panic had made itself felt, officers and seamen were running through the ship assuring the passengers that they need not be alarmed and that care would be taken of them. The work of launching life-boats from the undamaged side of the ship was commenced, while the liner continued to roll father and farther until she was almost on her beam-ends.

In the meantime the wireless had began to speak and "S. O. S." calls were being flashed to all the stations that fringe the Irish, Welsh and English coasts.

It was not realized at first that the ship had been torpedoed as the passengers who were walking upon the decks had seen no trace of a submarine. The liner was passing at 16 knots speed through the steamship lane that British warships have taken particular pains to keep free of invaders and all on board felt safe. The jollity that always marks the end of safe trans-Altantic voyage was already in evidence when the crash came.

The second explosion seemed to break the great ship's back. It was said by persons on a fishing boat on the Old Head of Kinsale, that the bow of the Lusitania rose high in the air and immediately afterward the ship begn to list.

Among the first of the small boats to reach the scene was the Irish trawler Daniel O'Connell, which was lying about eight miles off Kinsale harbor, when the seamen on board were alarmed by the explosions. The Daniel O'Connell picked up 60 passengers, mostly women and children from two of the Lusitania's life boats. All in the boats were in a deplorable condition from fear and shaken nerves. The O'Connell started with her human burden for Kinsale, but was intercepted by a government tug which took off the survivors and steamed toward Queenstown with them. Fisherman on the O'Connell reported that the sea in the neighborhood of the Lusitania was filled with wreckage. Bodies were seen floating in the water, some encased in life-belts and others buoyed up with bits of debris. Survivors told the O'Connell seamen that the liner sank so quickly that many persons must have gone down with her.

Chief Steward F. V. Jones, who was landed at Queenstown, declared that the loss of life among the saloon passengers would be very high.

"Most of the first cabin passengers were at lunch when the attack was delivered" said Jones. "The torpedoes were of great destructive quality. In fact we did not know that the ship had been damaged so severely."

Some of the Lusitania survivors were landed at Clonakilty, where they were given shelter by the fisherfolk.

Lady MackWorth, daughter of David A. Thomas, the multi-millionaire coal mine owner of Wales, had a narrow escape from death. Taking the word of the officers that the ship would not sink, she remained on board but took the precaution to wear a life belt. When the liner plunged to the bottom Lady MackWorth went down with the ship but when she rose to the surface she was picked up by a life boat.

It is believed that more than one German submarine was lying in wait for the Lusitania. A submarine was seen in Dunmanus Bay, at the extreme southwestern corner of Ireland on Friday morning and another off Glandore Bay. Glandore Bay is about 30 miles west of Kinsale and Dunmanus Bay about 45 miles west of the point where the Cunarder was destroyed.

There were no Germans aboard the liner, but the following other nationalities were represented on the first class passenger list:

"American, British, Greek, Swedish, Swiss, Mexican, Dutch, Italian, French, Russian and Canadian."

Gold Watch Stolen.

The police have been notified that a lady's gold watch with monogram "E. L. L.," was stolen at Glasco on Friday and were asked to see if an Italian suspected of the theft had pawned it in this city. The matter is being investigated.

SURVIVOR TELLS OF THRILLING ESCAPE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Liverpool, May 8.—David A. Thomas, millionaire coal operator of Cardiff, Wales, who with his daughter, Lady MackWorth, were passengers on the Lusitania, told a thrilling story of the escape of his daughter and of Captain W. T. Turner, of the lost liner.

"Lady MackWorth went down with the ship and was picked up unconscious after being in the water for three and a half hours," said Mr. Thomas. "Her life was saved by her forethought in putting on a life-belt. She was taken to Queenstown suffering from the shock and exposure, but very glad to be alive.

"The Lusitania was torpedoed without notice. At the time she was about 15 miles off the Irish coast. The explosions tore great holes in the hull beneath the waterline and the liner went down in about 12 or 15 minutes.

"It was a most dastardly outrage and it deserves the condemnation of the whole civilized world. Had the disaster occurred at night or during rough weather probably not a soul on board would have been saved. I question whether any boats on the port side were successfully launched. This was the side that was torpedoed and the ship immediately listed.

"As soon as the explosions occurred and the officers learned what had happened the ship's course was directed toward the shore with the idea of beaching her. There is a difference of opinion as to the number of torpedoes fired. Some say there were two but my belief is that only one was launched.

"Captain Turner is a brave man. He remained upon the bridge until the ship went down and he was swallowed up in the maelstrom which followed. He wore a life-belt which kept him afloat when he arose to the surface and remained in the water for three hours before he was picked up by a life-boat.

"During the last few minutes of the life of the Lusitania she was a ship of panic and tumult. Excited men and terrified women ran shouting and screaming about the decks. Lost children cried shrilly. Officers and seamen rushed among the panic stricken passengers, shouting orders and helping the woman and children into life boats. Women clung desperately to their husbands and knelt upon the decks. Piles of life preservers were distributed among the passengers who hastily donned them and flung themselves into the water.

"In their haste and excitement the seamen overloaded one life-boat and the davit ropes broke while it was being lowered, the occupants being thrown into the water. The screams of these terrified women and men rose to the decks intensifying the fright of those still on the ship. Some of the passengers were picked up from the water by other boats. I don't know what happened to the others. Altogether I counted ten life boats launched."

RHINEBECK GIRL ON LUSITANIA

Among the passengers on the ill-fated Lusitania, which was torpedoed off the Irish coast on Friday was Miss Ethel Merritt, daughter of Douglass Merritt, a wealthy resident of Rhinebeck. Miss Merritt was on her way to Europe to act as a Red Cross nurse with the armies.

IDENTIFYING DEAD IN QUEENSTOWN

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Queenstown, May 8.—As the first light of morning fell upon the city of Queenstown, bodies of men, women and children were landed today from trawlers and tugs that arrived during the night from the waters where the Lusitania plunged to the bottom of the Atlantic ocean after being torpedoed.

The bodies were brought ashore at the Cunard wharf and laid out in long rows. Within an hour nealy a hundred had been laid out. Seabattered sailormen wept as they tenderly carried ashore the bruised and mangled bodies of little children and lay them upon the canvases stretched over the floor of the Cunard store-houses.

As fast as the bodies were brought ashore, clerical employees of the Cunard line took up the grewsome task of identification. Some collapsed after they had been at this work for a short time and had to be replaced by others.

George E. Chamberlain, American consul at Cork, arrived here at midnight and took charge of the task of caring for the American survivors. In response to a dispatch from the American embassy at London, he tried to get some trace of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, but was unsuccessful.

"I am afraid that Mr. Vanderbilt perished" said Mr. Chamberlain. "I am unable to get any trace of him."

Some of the forty-four American survivors landed here departed for London via Liverpool at noon. Arrangements were made to send the others later in the day.

Many of those rescued from the Lusitania and landed here were on the verge of collapse today and only fragmentary stories of the disaster could be obtained from them. The general belief is that the Lusitania had been struck by two torpedoes, though some said that only one had reached its mark.

All were unanimous that the Lusitania was sunk without warning. The survivors agreed that there was no panic on board the liner, though for a time there was considerable excitement among the steerage passengers. Apparently many of those on board the liner believed that she would not sink and this is said to have increased the death list, scores declining to take to the boats until it was too late.

According to most of the survivors, the Lusitania sank twenty minutes after she was torpedoed. Some say that they saw the periscope of a submarine after they had taken to the boats.

The Lusitania went down by the head, causing a great suction that pulled down several boats still alongside her as she plunged. Most of the occupants of these boats were drowned.

Among the victims was a woman with a little baby. She was sitting opposite the ship's doctor at lunch when the shock came. The doctor told her to get on deck quickly and she did so, taking to one of the boats. This was pulling away as the Lusitania took her final plunge. All in the boat were carried down, only the baby's cap floating on the water, showing where more than a score of persons had gone to their death.

Julian De Ayala, the Cuban consul at Liverpool, came ashore wrapped in a blanket covering, the only garment he had on when the Lusitania was sunk. He was in bed when the liner was torpedoed. Mrs. M. N. Pappadopoulo, wife of a wealthy Athenian, saved herself by swimming. She reached Queenstown clad in a sailor's trousers. Her husband was drowned.

Several clergymen were among those rescued. They came ashore in shirt and trousers. Some were suffering from serious injuries and are expected to die.

QUEENSTOWN CONSUL REPORTS 634 SAVED

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, May 8.—Consul Lauriat at Queenstown, Ireland, today notified the state department that the total number of survivors of the Lusitania now numbers 634. The consul's dispatch says:

"Very few others are believed to have escaped. Several unidentified corpses. Total survivors now 634. Americans proceeding Saturday afternnon, reach London Sunday."

49 AMERICANS AMONG SURVIVORS

Mothers' Day to be Observed.

Tomorrow will be celebrated throughout the United States as "Mothers' Day," and the Sunday school of the Fair Street Reformed Church are prepared to join in the spirit of the occasion with plans appropriate to the purpose of the day. Invitations have been sent to the mothers of all members of the school, especially requesting their presence at tomorrow's session of Sunday school, as guests of honor in the various classes. Each mother visitor, as well as each class member, will be presented with a white carnation, the Mothers' Day flower, as a souvenir. Special music, a "welcome" by the superintendent and a short address by the pastor, Rev. Frank B. Seeley, will contribute to the pleasure of the occasion.

Marbletown Farm Sold.

This morning at the court house Everett Fowler as referee in an action entitled Victor Van Wagenen against Simon Van Wagenen and others, sold at public auction at the court house a farm in the town of Marbletown near Stone Ridge containing about 15 acres of land. The property was sold to Emma Palen for $1,275. V. B. Van Wagenen was attorney for plaintiff.

THREE TORPEDOES HIT THE STEAMER

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Dublin, May 8.—The Lusitania was sunk without warning by a German submarine that fired three torpedoes into her. The liner was shattered by the three explosions and sank within 20 minutes after the first missile had been fired. This information was given to an I. N. S. correspondent here today by the cabin steward of the lost ship upon his arrival from Queenstown.

His narrative follows:

"Most of the first cabin passengers were at lunch. The weather was beautifully clear and calm. We were about 7 or 8 miles off Galley Head and were making about 16 knots an hour when the attack was launched.

"Following the first torpedo two more were launched. The first staggered the ship. The other completed the work of destruction, shattering the giganic liner to fragments.

(Note—This was the first intimation that three torpedoes had been fired. Accounts given previously generally agreed that only two shots had been fired.)

"The submarine was seen upon our starboard bow, suddenly appearing on the surface and then diving abruptly again after firing the first torpedo. We saw the track made by the torpedo in the water and knew it was going to get us . It was aimed to strike amidships and it got us fair and square. The Lusitania listed forward and at once began to settle. While submerged the submarine released two more torpedoes, both of which struck us.

"From the moment the submarine sighted us and submerged itself it was not seen again. It went off after accomplishing its dirty work and never attempted to save man, woman nor child, but left them to drown like rats in a trap.

"I believe that both Alfred G. Vanderbilt and his valet were drowned.

"The Lusitania lived just twenty minutes after the first torpedo was fired.

"The approach and explosion of that first torpedo presented a terrible sight, but the passengers remained suprisingly cool.

"I believe that most of the first class passengers were drowned. At the most not more than five hundred or six hundred could have been saved. Most of those rescued were second and third class passengers.

Not a moment's notice was given before the atack was made.

"The ship sank like a stone. It was a terrifying scene. A great many were carried down by the suction of the whirlpool. Hundreds jumped overboard and clung to floating wreckage or overturned boats which had been blown from the ship by the explosions. Captain Turner remained on the bridge and went down with his ship. I think the first and second officers, five engineers and seventeen out of our 74 firemen were saved.

(Note—Captain Turner was also saved.)

"We had about 374 saloon passengers and as far as I know only 12 were saved."

A 16 year old lad named W. G. Ellosom Myers, of Stratford, Ont., who was on his way to join the British navy, saw the torpedo approaching the ship. He said that only two torpedoes were fired.

MATTERS BEFORE THE SURROGATE

The will of Cornelius C. Turner of the town of Marbletown has been admitted to probate by Surrogate Gill. The testator gives all his real estate and personal property except money to his son, Willie Turner, on condition that he care for, maintain and support his mother, Mrs. Mary E. Turner, during her life. All moneys on deposit in banks are given to the widow, or in case of her death they are to be divided equally between the son, Willie Turner, and daughter, Ida Wilklow. The son is appointed executor. The will was executed August 5, 1910, and witnessed by Virgil B. Van Wagonen and Oscar Rider. The value of the estate is $600 real estate and $250 personal property. Virgil B. Van Wagonen appeared for the executor.

The will of Jeannette V. Edgerton of the town of Woodstock was filed and a citation for its probate was issued returnable June 29th. The will does not name any executor and a petition for letters of administration with the will annexed was made by Emma M. Koderl, an adopted daughter and legatee under the will. The will was executed April 17, 1915, and witnessed by Charles Lapo and Cora Lapo. The value of the estate is $500 personal property. Jenkins & Shufeldt appeared for the petitioner.

It Is Women's Business to Look After Europe's Civilization.

MISS JANE ADDAMS.

Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, who is now giving so much of her time to promoting the work of the woman's peace party, was interviewed recently in regard to our responsibility in the present war.

"This war," said Miss Addams, "seems to me to be the most primitive war imaginable. It is as though the nations of the world had gone completely around the cycle of wars for freedom, for religion and all such causes and were now come back to the most primitive of all wars—the war for self defense.

"Each nation in the present struggle claims to be fighting for self defense. Each one shows a sort of tribal patriotism; it must defend its own tribe, its own property. And that is by far the lowest kind of patriotism. It harks back to the days when there were no courts of justice; when men settled difficulties by physical force; when tribes were separate units, each continually on the watch to defend itself from aggression or injury on the part of others.

"In those primeval days there was a distinct tribal appeal to women. They were not merely to stay at home and be protected; it was their business to bear children. The edicts of Europe's warring rulers today and the hosts of 'war brides' hark back to those early centuries when the chief duty of man was to fight and die and that of women to replace the dead.

"Now by this primitive warfare the work of long, long years is being destroyed. In France, for instance, the women were just beginning to get some improvements in the laws which concerned them, coguardianship of children, for one thing. The whole social fabric is distorted, the long years of struggle and sacrifice to attain a better civilization, to unite men and women and children, are gone for naught. It is our business to see that all the civilization of Europe shall not be destroyed.

"It's difficult to say what the reconstruction will be," continued Miss Addams. "We can none of us prophesy that. But I'm inclined to think that it will be in many ways not unlike the reconstruction which followed the Napoleonic wars in France. Just traveling about there casually one is surprised at the many and varied things that women do, what an important part they play in industry and petty commerce, how they run hotels and keep shops and often act as cashiers for their husbands.

"Women will be in relatively the same position when this war is over, I believe, in political life. After all that they are doing now it will be possible for them to go into public affairs, semipolitical affairs at least."

It seems that a lawyer is something of a carpenter. He can file a bill, split a hair, chop logic, dovetail an argument, make an entry, g up a case, frame an indictment, en nel a jury, put them in a box, bore court, chisel a client, and other like things.

ENGLISH WOMEN POLICE ON DUTY.

Since the enlistment of so many of England's young men for service at the front women have been drafted into their places. In no man's place have they done better or more faithful service than on the police force as uniformed officers. They have, even in the short time they have been "on the job" managed to specialize in certain lines not heretofore overly well covered by men and it is safe to say that a great many women will retain their places after the close of the war and the return of the men now at the front to their old employments.

Wash All Fruit.

Incoming cargoes of fruits should be closely observed for traces of poisonous insecticides. Growers are not always careful to remove all traces of sprays before marketing their fruit. Housekeepers can protect themselves from danger from this source by washing all fruit in several waters before serving it. It would be advisable and insure greater safety to wash the fruit before placing it in the storeroom or ice chest. Sprays and powders of sufficient strength to kill insects which feed upon and destroy fruit trees and fruit would prove fatal to life if partaken of by human beings.

Necessitarians.

The philosophic term "necessitarians" is used to denote those persons that deny the freedom of will and assert that in human conduct all volitions are determined by motives that obey the law of causation as invariably as do the forces of nature. The word "determinists" was suggested as a substitute by John Stuart Mill and has been very generally adopted.—New York American.

"Nonsense!" cried Ina. "You know, Kathleen, he is a regular idiot."

"Yes," replied Kathleen, "but he's so many kinds of an idiot."—Detroit Free Press.

THE GREAT NAVAL PARADE IN NEW YORK.

New York, May 8.—The city is celebrating the arrival of the Atlantic fleet. Super-dreadnaughts, dreadnaughts, battle-cruisers, cruisers, torpedo boats and torpedo boat destroyers, submarines and all of Uncle Sam's Atlantic Coast naval fighting force are at anchor here. President Wilson and his cabinet will review the ships before they return to sea.

These pictures of submarines are unusual. Except on occasions of this kind no photographs are permitted to be taken of the underwater craft—in fact, visitors rarely are permitted to see them. The D-1, D-2 and D3 (shown here) are among the latest additions to the navy.

Had Duties to Attend To.

The first morning my little brother went to kindergarten he was very good until about ten o'clock, when he got up and started out. The teacher asked where he was going. He replied, "I'se doin' to det some lunch." Not living very far she let him go. He returned in the afternoon and was very good until about three o'clock, when he started out again. The teacher called him back and said, "Where are you going now?" He answered, "I des I dota take my nap, don't I?"—Chicago Tribune.

Valuable Oak Carvings.

In the vaults of St. Paul's cathedral in London is stored away a rich store of priceless oak carving, part of which was originally in the cathedral, and part removed from city churches when demolished. A selection of these relics, consisting mostly of woodwork placed in the cathedral in the time of Sir Christopher Wren, has just been lent to the Geffrye museum of the L. C. C. Of special interest are a prayer desk, an overdoor, stall brackets, trusses, and an oak capital, all beautifully carved, together with specimens of Tijou's ironwork.

THE DARDANELLES.

A Strait Famed In Mythology as Well as In History.

The Dardanelles and the Hellespont are names for the same thing. At its narrowest place the strait is less than a mile wide. On one side is Asia, and on the other is Europe.

The strait is famous in mythology. The pre-Christian incursions of barbarians into Europe often were halted there.

Xerxes and Alexander ferried across. One determined to destroy the civilization of Greece and the other to diffuse Grecian culture over the whole world.

Crusaders went back and forth over this strait. The Roman empire of the east commanded it even after the Mohammedans had established themselves at Adrianople.

By treaty and by consent and by her situation Turkey was given control of this strait.

Strange to say, in modern times the first ship of war that ever passed through flew the flag of America. Bainbridge ran by the guns of the forts and unfurled the stars and stripes in front of Constantinople, and in that city he and the American crew were elaborately entertained.

For many centuries Russia has looked with eager eyes for the control of the shores along this strait.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

The judge did not seem to appreciate the remarks of the lawyer for the defense. (Several years before they had had a fight over the question of religion.) At last the judge interrupted the lawyer and said: "Do you not know that everything you are saying is going in one ear and out the other?" The lawyer turned to him and replied: "Your honor, what is to prevent?"—Burr.

Narrow Teaching.

Those who teach morality, limiting its obligations to duties toward family or country, teach you a more or less narrow egoism and lead you to what is evil for others and for themselves. Country and family are like two circles drawn within a greater circle which contains them both; like two steps of a ladder without which you could not climb any higher, but upon which it is forbidden you to stay your feet.—Mazzini.

NOT PIRACY, BUT ——?

When Colonel Roosevelt heard of the sinking of the Lusitania he promptly declared that it was "piracy on a vaster scale of murder than old time pirates ever practiced." This is merely a flinging of inappropriate epithets in the way common to men who talk faster than they think. Sir Thomas Barclay, one of the great authorities on international law, says: "A public ship or one which is entitled to fly the flag of a belligerent and navigates under the cover of State papers, by the very sense of the term is not a pirate." Neither is the charge of murder appropriate except in that general sense in which all war may be considered murderous.

It is not easy to find the right word to describe this affair, but no fair-minded person will deny that it is a crime against humanity. It has no justification. It is never right to kill non-combatants unless they are caught in an act of violence against their enemies. The Germans in Belgium were justified in executing natives who "sniped" their soldiers, but not in shooting unarmed citizens, and they agree to this proposition themselves. Under the accepted principles of international law and the customs of all civilized nations Germany had a perfect right to capture the Lusitania or any other British vessel. If the prize is a fighting ship she has a perfect right to sink it without warning if she can. But she has no such right in the case of an unarmed vessel carrying non-combatants. She can capture it, and since she is unable to take it into any port she may sink it, but first she must give all the passengers an opportunity to get off. If she does not, she is as bad as a pirate or murderer, even though she is technically neither.

The Staats Zeitung, which is Germany's warmest friend among our newspapers, says that "the attack upon the Lusitania was "deplorable," but that it was a natural sequence of England's "starvation policy against Germany," and adds: "In this war neither of the belligerents sticks at anything. International law has ceased to exist." This is a pretty poor excuse, since two wrongs never make one right, and besides the Germans are in no danger of starvation. Possibly they may have to be prudent in their use of food, but that is quite a different matter from being at the bottom of the ocean. Furthermore, what good has the sinking of the Lusitania done Germany? It has not brought her an ounce of food. It is of no military advantage. It will not shorten the war. Worst of all, it arouses the indignation of neutral nations and men who would be friendly to her if she would let them.

The diplomatic situation of the United States is not much altererd by this affair. It is not so charged with the possibilities of trouble as was the attack upon the Gulflight, which flew the American flag. Matters which most sway the multitude are not always the most important in the councils of statesmen. Thus far our grievances against both Germany and the Allies are susceptible of amicable settlement, but, unfortunately, we have no assurance that they will remain so.

Professor Albert Clay of Yale University has made further translations of the world's oldest laws as embodied in inscriptions on Babylonian tablets unearthed some time ago and now in possession of the University. Three of the laws relate to property and damages for its injury or destruction and three relate to personal relations between members of the same family. Another law provides that a son who shall wish to depart from home and sets forth shall have a portion of his inheritance given to him, and Professor Clay points out that this law, which was enacted more than two thousand years before the birth of Christ, governed and determined the case of the Prodigal Son, whose story is told in the Bible. This law was in force nearly four thousand years ago. Today the practice then prescribed is followed in some countries, and in many countries and states there is legislation which in a modified form makes somewhat similar provision. For nearly every "new" law or "new" question which arises, precedent can be found in the life or laws of some civilization in some part of the world. The same arguments now advanced in support of or in opposition to proposed changes have their counterpart in times long past—perhaps a couple of hundred, perhaps a couple of thousand years ago. To the inquirer whether there is anything new under the sun, the answer is that while conditions change, human nature and principles never change. It is the application of never-changing principles by men whose nature is the same now as it was in the days of Adam and Eve which makes it appear that every subject on which the human mind shows an active interest already has excited the brain cells of the race in a distant age and has been passed upon. That is the fact, but each generation must pass through the same experiences, mental and moral, as its predecessors. Man is born with brains but he must use them if he expects to get anywhere.

WHAT IS THE REASON?

(By Our Woman Editor.

Awhile ago a woman, dean of the women at a university in the west, gathered statistics showing that only two per cent of the women graduates of that institution marry. According to her finding, the majority earn their own living.

And where is the trouble—or the reason? Is it with the college training, with the man who fears to tempt fate with a woman who has earned her degrees, or with the woman who has learned how to carve her own fortune, assure her own independence and live a life in which man, as a personal factor, is practically eliminated?

In a way, one cannot altogether wonder that a man, moderately situated, feels some measure of uncertainty as to what a college training may have done for a particular woman. It may have broadened and strengthened her, better equipped her for the duties of home-making and for all life's practical interests. For that is what colleges are trying to do, more today than ever before. Or it may have unconsciously led her away from any deep concern for the very things that would be vital in her sphere as a wife.

If she has received a truly liberal education, in its highest sense, has learned to place a true value upon all that she won through college associations and has grown broad with the training, then it would seem that he had nothing to fear, everything to hope for.

But if she leaves college walls and college ways, having absorbed ideas that she cannot live up to, learned extravagances that unfit her to spend a small income, then a man well may falter on the brink of marriage with her. If her career is to be found in the realm of wifehood and she has not learned to make life more beautiful to herself and family through her college training, surely there are breakers ahead for somebody.

For, apart from all the wisdom that may be gathered in a four years' course at college, there are all the other experiences, the atmosphere and the associations. And everything depends upon the final product, whether the college and its manifold influences have enlarged or narrowed her vision.

As to the woman herself and her attitude toward matrimony, there is little doubt that her ever-increasing industrial independence makes her think longer before consenting to unite her fortunes with those of another, to be made or marred, as fate and the man may decree.

Of all the advantages that have come to the intelligent woman of the period, that which enables her to encompass her own independence and to reach out for the dominant right of remunerative occupation, industrial or professional, is surely one of the most kindly and widespread in effect.

The instinct for romantic love is inborn, and a woman turns to thoughts of marriage just as naturally and as freely as does a man, because it is so decreed and it would be a perversion of nature if it were otherwise. But with the new vista that has opened before her and with her widened opportunities, she has learned to wait, not only for love, but for the endorsement of her own judgment.

It was one of the tragedies of earlier times that for a woman, there was danger in delay, fear that a first opportunity to marry might not be succeeded by another and that she might be forced to weather the storms of life alone, driven to one of the very few and very unattractive ports of self-support that the times opened to her.

Why wonder that she often accepted the first matrimonial offer that came, and why wonder that the precipitation made her marriage a failure, the wrong man accepted, the right looming up too late for her?

And why wonder that in the process of considering marriage her only hopeful career, in the desire properly to marshal all her forces, she sometimes became designing, deceitful, determined to win whatever the cost?

They are trying to tell us that with increased independence, woman suffers a corresponding decrease in charm. Does that mean that as she gets farther and farther away from the old, humiliating condition of quietly folding her hands and praying for delivery from the bondage of dependence, else conducting a marriage campaign by all the arts she knows—does it mean that her natural, simple womanhood ceases to please?

If there were no money considerations involved, no thought of future support, and never had been any, then a woman well might bide her time and wait for the right man to appear; but alas and alas! while she is waiting and refusing, time and opportunity move merrily on to those less discriminating.

And it is this gracious period of industrial awakening, the freedom to wait and meanwhile to win her own way, that is making the trained woman move more slowly in matrimonial waters. There is little fear that it will make her over-cautious and lead her to push aside her opportunity for wedded happiness, because love is peremptory and insistent always.

But it is as it permits her to await the coming of love and the endorsement of judgment that it brings salvation to her and a better prospect to both.

Revenge.

Reginald W. Kauffman, the novelist, lives in Scarborough in the winter, but in the summer he usually comes back home for he dislikes Scarborough in its summer resort plase.

Mr. Kauffman, in a letter to a New York magazine editor, shed a new light on the German bombardment.

"Everybody is wondering," he wrote "why on earth the Germans ever bombarded this unfortified town. I have just learned, however, that Admiral von Tirpitz once spent a holiday here."—New York World.

Revised Version.

"The Russians penetrating into Prussia, are inflicting on the towns and cities war indemnities proportionate to those which the Germans inflicted on poor Belgium."

The speaker was H. L. de Give, Belgian consul to Atanta. He continued:

"The Russians are evidently taking for their motto: 'When in Germany do as the Germans do.'"—Washington Times.

Taking No Chances.

Readers who had some difficulty in remembering where the Falkland Islands were, may have been helped by the recollection of one of Ian Maclaren's stories. After a disaster to an emigrant ship many years ago, some of the survivors reached those islands. When the news reached home, the minister of a Scotish church to which some of the emigrants belonged, prayed thus: "Oh, Lord, we pray Thee to be with our brethren, stranded in the Falkland Islands, which, as Thou knowest, are situated in the South Atlantic Ocean."—Argonaut.

His Last Wish.

Representative James William Collier of Mississippi was the principal speaker at a banquet in Washington. When the toastmaster arose to introduce Representative Collier, he said, in part: "I shall now introduce to you a distinguished southern gentleman who will speak to you freely as the Southern farmer distributes the stuff that makes the grass grow."

Representative Collier, equal to the occasion, arose and told the following story, which he said reminded him a good deal of the toastmaster:

"The family doctor received a hurried sick call, saying that the father of the family was very sick. When the doctor reached his patient he found him in a serious condition.

"He said to his patient, 'I have attended you for 10 weeks and now I am afraid that you are going to die. Is there any wish you would like to make?'

"'Yes,' replied the sick man, 'I wish that I had gotten another doctor!'"—Washington Post.

Divided Care.

Three-year-old Edward has a cousin, Dorothy, about half a year younger than he is. He goes down to her house and gets her every day. One night, after saying his prayers, he said to his mother, "God takes care of my Dorfy by night and I take care of her by day."

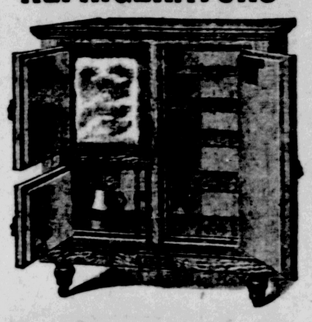
EDD REFRIGERATORS



Most Economical in the Use of the Ice

They Keep the Cold Air In

A Personal Call Will Be Appreciated

Eddy Chests and Refrigators are constructed on scientific principles, and the material used is the most practical for such purposes.

For this reason, all cases are of WHITE PINE, as it is the best non-conductor of heat, and less liable to swell and warp than hard woods.

All linings are of heavy zinc, as this is the most permanent. Every seam can be soldered, so as to make it absolutely air-tight. Odors and germs cannot penetrate back of it.

The insulation is of our own invention, and, in connection with the dead air space used, the best results are obtained.

The shelves are all SLATE STONE. They are sanitary, smooth, easy to clean, and retain the cold. Furthermore, they will not rust or rot.

The upright and chest styles have double covers a very great help in keeping the ice. That means money saved.

The perfect circulation of cold, dry air utilizes every ounce of ice to the best advantage.

The ice rack, pipe and trap are all removable and simple. No fussy parts to get out of order.

Bear in mind that a refrigerator is intended for an article of use, not an ornament. The EDDY is of the QUALITY line, honest way through.

Sixty-eight years of continuous business stands back of every Eddy. Is not this experience worth something to you when buying a refrigerator?

STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

Work Under Way or Soon to Begin on City Streets.

Concreting on the Ferry street brick pavement job is about completed by the street force except a portion in front of the Central-Hudson Steamboat Company's property. There repairs are being made to the weighing scales. Progress is being made on the laying of brick and grouting the same.

At 7 o'clock this evening the street force will begin concreting and laying brick at the approach to the Sleightsburgh ferry slip. The ferry will be closed to teams but not to foot passengers. The work will continue until the work has been completed and will be ready for use on Monday morning.

On Monday morning Street Superintendent Van Keuren expects to begin work on tearing up Clinton avenue from Main to North Front street, and on North Front to Fair street. The road will be properly macadamized and the object is to divert some of the traffic which now uses the brick pavement on Main street exclusively and at times forms a congestion there. The work will be done in a short time and prove equally good for automobilists as well as other vehicles.

GLEE CLUBS CONCERT.

Good Attendance and Good Music at New High School.

The auditorium of the new high school was thronged with an appreciative audience Friday evening when the annual concert of the Glee Clubs of Kingston and Ulster Academies was given under the direction of Miss Margaretta E. Paulding, supervisor of music in the city schools.

Twelve numbers comprised the program, four of which were given by the combined Glee Clubs of both schools, two by the Boys' Glee Club, two by the Girls' Glee Club, and two each by the boys' selected chorus and a semi-chorus of mixed voices.

The combined glee clubs sang with great expression Mendelssohn's "The Lord is Great," which was probably the best rendered number on the program. Ambrose's "Shoogy Shoe" also was well rendered by the combined clubs and was very popular with the audience. Friml's "Twilight," sung by the Girls' Glee Club, and Geibel's "Kentucky Babe," by the Boys' Glee Club were faultless in their rendition and the latter received such prolonged applause that the club was forced to repeat it. The new Mason & Hamlin grand piano recently purchased for the high school by the board of education was used for the first time and the accompanists, Miss Myrtle Weber and Miss Lena Harford, were excellent in the work. Great credit is due to the Glee Clubs and to Miss Paulding, under whose direction the program was prepared and rehearsed, for the success of the concert.

Sopranos—Violet Burhans, Hazel Byer, Rose Bergen, Helen Bronson, Alberta Craig, Florence Craig, Elizabeth Cockburn, Frances Costello, Anna Casseler, Evelyn Delamater, Annette Dressel, Elizabeth Dederick, Dorothy Demgen, Marguerite Edwards, Ada Fuller, Dorothy Fessenden, Elsie Grant, Ruth Hogan, Ethel Hull, Marian Hampton, Antoinette Ketterer, Carrie Messinger, Vesta Markle, Estelle McNeils, Ella Mathews, Mabel Nestell, Gertrude Rafferty, Marietta Riseley, Carrie Sager, Laura Snow, Cora Sisson, Nina Shultis, Katherine Smith, Ruth Smith, Viola Thompson, Harriet Weber.

Japanese Cookery.

Japanese cooks seldom use the fingers in the preparation of food. Chopsticks, spoons and many other ingenious little utensils in white wood do the work, which is of the most elaborate nature, many of the dishes requiring twenty-four hours to prepare.

OVERCOMING A DIFFICULTY IN EGYPT.

Owing to the great number of wounded soldiers arriving at Alexandria, Egypt, most of the hospitals are full, and to overcome this difficulty the authorities have erected tents in the grounds of the Casino for the less serious cases.

In the ideal conditions that prevail at the present time the patients are undergoing no hardships.

The Little Stranger

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Singular it is, but nevertheless true, that there are a great many desertions on one side or the other in couples that have been married a year, and I believe that if statistics on the subject could be obtained it would be found that the nearer the wedding the greater the number of desertions. There is a reason for this. Up to the time of marriage the parties are independent of each other. After marriage there are two wills, between which there must necessarily be a certain amount of clashing.

Jim and Lizzie Burden were one of those couples that met, but did not mingle. Jim found his wife—so he considered her—so unreasonable that he hadn't been married a week before the sweetness had turned to gall. Lizzie considered herself so badly treated that she could not possibly endure to live with such a man. So one day when he came home from work he found his wife gone.

Mrs. Jim didn't regret what she had done till she fell in with a motherly old lady, to whom she told her story, and the lady informed her of the cause of their disagreement, as it has been stated at the beginning of this story. Lizzie wondered if that was so. Then she began to think that she had acted unwisely. The next thing to do was to go back to her home and make up with Jim. She did not find him. The house was shut up, and Jim had gone, no one knew where.

When a baby was born to Lizzie she regretted more than ever her action in leaving her husband. The first baby is the first chain bound around a married couple—the first departure from a romance that may have waned and entry upon real married life. But now that the baby had come and Jim was not there to rejoice with her Lizzie wept bitter tears.

Meanwhile Jim, after waiting a week for his wife's return, got angry with her and, declaring that he had had enough of married life, walked off without leaving any address. Jim was a carpenter and had finished a job the day of the separation. It was easy for him to lose himself, and he took no pains to leave any clew by which he could be found by his wife in case she repented of leaving him and wished to return. He knew nothing about the baby or perhaps that might have changed it all.

Jim concluded to make another change in his life. He was a born trader and always came out ahead in any deal he made. He determined to leave off carpentering and turn trader. He had left the little money he possessed with his wife and hadn't a cent to his name. But to the real business man money is not always essential. It is often supplied by credit. Jim made up for its absence in assurance. He bought a lot of damaged coffee on credit for a song, gave it a fancy name and sold it for about two-thirds the usual price. This succeeded so well that within a few months he had turned over several job lots of coffee that he had bought cheap and not only made some money, but established a trade for his especial brand of coffee.

It occurred to Jim one day that his quarrels with his wife had nearly all been from the cause of want of sufficient funds. Now that he was making money possibly the troubles might not arise; at any rate, they were far less likely to arise. He began to recall the hours he and Lizzie had spent together when they were courting. He wondered if she had tried to find him. Then he thought what a brute he had been to leave her without giving her any opportunity to find him in case she wished to do so. Then he wondered if after all he hadn't a good deal of selfish brutality in him to have tried to impose his will on a woman and because she wouldn't brook it and had left him he had made the break between them permanent by taking his departure from their home without giving her an opportunity to find him and make it up.

The ladder of repentance usually has a number of rounds, and Jim's had its full share. When he had reached the top round he felt like plunging down headforemost on the other side and breaking his neck. But instead of that he set about finding Lizzie.

That was no easy job. She had no relatives to whom he could go for information, and she was so distressed, so poor, so broken in spirit, that she shrank from every one who had known her. When the baby came she secured admission to a maternity hospital, and when the time approached for her to get about again, realizing that she must work for her living and could not work encumbered with a baby, she determined to leave it at a foundings' home.

She was planning for this one day when she saw the door of the room she occupied at the hospital slowly open. Then a face appeared, looking cautiously in, as if fearing to disturb her.

Great heavens! It was Jim's!

The sight of his pale wife lying there with a little sleeper nestled up against her was too much for Jim's equanimity. With tears coursing down his cheeks, he stalked to the bed and took his wife and child together in his arms.

Neither Jim nor Lizzie had any fear of further disagreements. They would come, but a thought of the little stranger would take away their harshness, or at least tide the parents over them.

Life's Limits.

All indications point to the fact that less than ten miles below our feet a red heat is maintained permanently and within twenty a white heat. Ten miles above us we have the pitiless cold, far below zero, of interplanetary space. To what a narrow zone of delicately balanced temperature is life confined!

MANAGER M'GRAW RELEASES STAR PLAYERS

(By FRANK G. MENKE.)

It begins to look as if the most certain way for a ball player to become a star is for John McGraw to pronounce him not worth his keep.

Cincinnati became famous as a place for fellows to get their real start by being fired, but John of the Giants has been giving Garry Herrmann's outfit a close battle of late.

John had George Chalmers on his roster this spring, but after watching George throughout the spring season, John decided George wouldn't do. So he pointed to the gate and George went his way—jobless.

George hung around the polo ground when the Phillies made their visit recently, and looked so sorrowful that Pat Moran, manager of the Quaker town crowd, offered him a job. George accepted.

"McGraw says you ain't any good," said Pat to George. "I think you are. Now you go ahead and show me. The first job you get is against the Giants."

George faced his once-time Giant teammates, beat them 6 to 1, and allowed them two hits.

Al Demaree might be called exhibit B in this case. McGraw thought so little of Demaree that he traded him to the Phillies along with Milton Stock for Hans Lobert. Demaree's first appearance was against the Giants and he shut them out.

The story concerning Dick Rudolph was printed from one end of the land to the other last year. John once owned Dick, but didn't think much of him. So he turned him loose and Dick eventually landed with the Braves and materially assisted in pitching them into the world championship.

Hankerinus Gowdy could have been a Giant regular. But McGraw couldn't see him. Stallings could, and Gowdy today ranks as one of the best fielding backstops in the game, and as the greatest slugging catcher in any league.

Charley Herzog has few equals as a third sacker. But McGraw let him go to Cincinnati. If Herzog had been kept by McGraw in 1914, a different story might have been written about the world series, because the weakness at third lost at least a half dozen games for the Giants. Of course, Herzog was let go partly for friendship's sake—but should friendship figure in baseball?

McGraw had a chance to grab Edward Trowbridge Collins.

Red Ames was traded by McGraw to Cincinnati for Art Fromme and another player. Ames pitched great ball for the Reds last season, while Fromme flivvered badly.

Heinie Groh was considered of major league caliber by McGraw. He let the mite go to Cincinnati where he developed into one of the very best basemen in the game.

Beals Becker, who is fielding in sensational style and hammering the ball to all portions of the lots for the Phillies, is a Giant castoff. He would look mighty grand in the wobbly Giants' outfield just now.

And these are only a few of the most recent folks that John canned, and who did a "come-forward" as soon as they hopped into another uniform.

NOTES of the DIAMOND

Dick Egan, Brooklyn infielder, has been purchased by Boston.

• • •

The Toronto club has sold catcher Kirchell to the Richmond club.

• • •

Jack Bliss, catcher for the Venice Tigers, has drawn his unconditional release.

• • •

Cincinnati critic comes out in nonpareil type saying that Bancroft can't bunt or run bases.

• • •

The Memphis club has released unconditionally Hubert Taylor, a young infielder of Senatobia, Miss.

• • •

The Buffalo club has secured second baseman Frank Truesdale from the New York American club.

• • •

Manager Patsy Donovan of Buffalo, has signed another pitcher, C. E. Moore, last year with Springfield.

• • •

Outfielder Clemens, the slugger of the Texas league last year, has reported to Rochester by way of St. Louis.

• • •

The ball players are not greatly worked up over the refusal of the national commission to grant the latest requests.

• • •

A Texan has invented a crutch that folds into a camp stool. We recommend it to Joe Cantillon for use of his ball players.

• • •

In the New York state league, Manager Joe O'Rourke of Albany, has signed pitcher Jacobs of the Philadelphia National club.

• • •

New Orleans took the palm for attendance on opening day, when 10,610 paid spectators witnessed the opening of the new Heineman field.

• • •

Joe Schultz appears to have clinched the job of guarding third for the Brooklyn. He has an easy, graceful style of hitting and steps into the ball fearlessly.

President Barrow of the International league, announces that Messrs. Solomon and Medicus paid $40,000 for the Ebbets-McKeever holdings in the Newark club.

RECORD FOR STEADY PLAYING

In Eight Years of Play Captain George McBride of Washington Has Missed But Seven Contests.

Years ago there was a wonderful ball player who was always injured at the critical stages of a pennant race, and it is estimated that injuries, which kept this player out of the game for weeks, and even months, had deprived his club of three pennants. Fans and scribes admitted his worth as a player, but came to the conclusion that he was not of such great value to the club because he was out of the game so much.

Figuring on this basis, which is undoubtedly correct, George McBride is the most valuable man that can be found anywhere. In eight years of major league playing McBride has missed but six days' play and but seven games, all told, a double-header being played on one occasion. This is indeed a remarkable record and is of great importance when one considers that McBride has always been considered the keynote to the Washington infield and its headiest and steadiest performer.

In this respect Sam Crawford is also a remarkable character. He has missed only one game in four seasons, and has not missed any since the middle of 1911.

A Gentlemanly Burglar

By EUNICE BLAKE

Mrs. George Ingersoll was awakened in the night by a sound on the floor below. Starting up in bed, she exclaimed sharply:

"What's that?"

Her husband having been awakened listened for a few moments, then asked impatiently:

"Well, what is it?"

"Burglars."

"Nonsense!"

"I'm certain of it."

There was another sound, which was this time heard by Mr. Ingersoll. He got out of bed and, putting on his trousers, opened the door, went out into the hall and turned on an electric light, illuminating the figure of a man. The fellow put his finger to his lips, at the same time throwing open his coat and displaying a policeman's badge. Stepping up to Ingersoll, he whispered:

"Turn out that light quick."

Ingersoll turned the button. He did not need any explanation, for it was plain that there was something wrong on the premises and a cop was at work with a view to righting it. Nevertheless he asked in a whisper:

"What's the matter?"

"We got wind today that Handy Andy, this crook who is going about getting into houses and leaving polite notes after taking the valuables, was intending to do you tonight and we've laid a trap for him."

"You'd better look out. I've read a lot in the papers about that fellow. He's mighty slippery; he may get you in a trap."

"Never fear for that. I've got the house surrounded."

"I don't hear anything below," said the owner of the premises after listening a few moments.

"True enough; he's laying low. It's too bad you turned on that light. He may have been frightened. But it makes no great difference, for as soon as he leaves the house he will step into the arms of one of my men. I would advise you to go back to your room, to bed for that matter. I'm Inspector Haynes. Perhaps you've heard of me. I much prefer to handle this matter without any interference."

"Oh, yes, I've heard of Inspector Haynes. Every one knows about him."

By this time Inspector Haynes had gently pushed Ingersoll to the door through which he had come from his bedroom and, opening it, urged him in. As soon as this was accomplished he shut the door.

"What is it?" asked Mrs. Ingersoll nervously.

"Hush!"

Ingersoll went to the bed, treading softly, and sat down on it; then, putting his lips near his wife's ear, he whispered:

"Handy Andy is in the house!"

"Oh, heavens!"

"But this will be his last burglary. He won't be leaving any more notes pinned to ladies' pincushions. Who do you suppose I found in the hall?"

"Who?"

"Inspector Haynes."

"Inspector Haynes! How came he in the house?"

"Got wind of Handy Andy's intended raid and has laid a trap for him."

"You don't mean it! I hope he'll escape—that is, without any of the silver or my jewels."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, judging by what has appeared in the papers this Handy Andy is perfectly fascinating. Some say that he's a real gentleman."

"A gentleman! How can a burglar be a gentleman?"

"Why, don't you know that some of the highwaymen in England a couple of hundred years ago were gentlemen? I've read a lot about them. They say Handy Andy writes beautiful poetry."

At that moment there was a sound below, which the imagination of Mr. Ingersoll interpreted to mean a scuffle.

"They're getting him," he said.

"Poor fellow!" exclaimed Mrs. Ingersoll sympathetically.

There was a tread as of a man leaving the house and walking across the front porch; then the footsteps died away in the distance.

"My jewels are locked in the top bureau drawer in the guest room," said Mrs. Ingersoll. "I'm going to see if they're all right."

"I'll go with you," said her husband.

They went to the guest room and turned on a light. The drawer in question stood open, and the jewels were gone. On the lace cover of the dresser was a bit of paper on which was scrawled in pencil:

My Dear Friends—Pardon me for disturbing you during the night. It grieves me to have awakened any lady there may be on the premises. All is vanity. That the wearer of these jewels may be no longer vain I will take them away with me. So long. HANDY ANDY (Alias Inspector Haynes).

"Oh, my goodness gracious!" exclaimed Mrs. Ingersoll.

"Stung, by thunder!" cried her husband.

Mr. Ingersoll went downstairs, where he found that what silver had been left on the sideboard for daily use had been taken and a polite note left regretting the necessity for its appropriation.

"If we must lose our valuables," said Mrs. Ingersoll, "it's nice to have them taken by so gentlemanly a burglar."

Handy Andy not long after this was captured by a neat stratagem which was perfected by the real Inspector Haynes and after serving a part of a long term died in prison.

BLOODLESS BATTLES.

One Campaign Where a British Army Did Not Lose a Man.

The battle of Futtehpore, one of four fights in eight days, in the midst of a forced march of 126 miles to the relief of Lucknow, was as far as the small British force is concerned absolutely bloodless, and Havelock's classical "order of the day" puts the fact on record.

In one of the battles against Akbar Khan in Afghanistan the result was almost equaly surprising. It was the punitive expedition of 1842 after the massacre at Kabul and the horrible retreat from which only Dr. Brydon escaped. This battle made up somewhat for the frightful disaster, for the victory could not have been more complete.

The Afghans were driven headlong into the river, and camp, baggage, artillery, horses, standards and arms of every kind were captured, together with abundant ammunition and provisions, while Akbar fled. Yet the British only had ten killed.

Probably the only bloodless campaign ever undertaken by the British was the Abyssinian expedition against King Theodore led by Lord Napier of Magdala. It was this bloodless war which gave him his title.

Although the British army consisted of 10,000 men and although they were met by the enemy, who put up a brave fight, and although they stormed Magdala, situated on cliffs so steep that it was said a cat could not climb them, yet not a life was lost on the British side.

If the last Ashanti expedition against King Prempeh could be dignified by the name of a campaign then it must be added to the list of bloodless wars. Certainly it cost the life of Prince Henry of Battenberg, the husband of Queen Victoria's youngest daughter and the father of the queen of Spain, but of other casualties there were none. —London Stray Stories.

FIGHT FOR PRINCIPLE.

His Task Seems a Hopeless One, Yet He Sticks to the Job.

Every little while you hear somebody say: "It isn't the expense I mind. It's the principle of the thing."

United States treasury officials have found that the country is overrun with persons who feel just that way. Here is one case:

Some years ago the crew of a government revenue cutter gave an entertainment of some sort, and, according to custom, assessed the cost of the affair among those aboard. Each man's share was taken from his pay. One young man was not in sympathy with some feature of the entertainment and objected to having to pay his share. It cost him only 30 cents, but it was the principle of the thing.

He began to write to the assistant secretary of the treasury, who had charge of the revenue cutter service, and demand justice.

That was years ago and the man has averaged about two letters a week ever since. He numbers his letters, and the last one was numbered seven hundred and something.

Two or three years ago he resigned from the revenue cutter service and is now living in New York, but he is still after his 30 cents and the establishment of a great principle.

When Charles Dewey Hilles was an assistant secretary of the treasury he sent the man his personal check for 30 cents in the hope that it would end the long correspondence, but it did not. The man promptly sent back the check, saying that he did not want the money but justice, and that the 30 cents must come from the government itself.

The Way Out.

The caricaturist borrowed £5 from the author.

"When he had got it and put it in his pocket he said these memorable words in his broken English: 'Halle, my fellow, if I take this £5 as a loan every time I see you I say: "Dere dat tiresome Halle. I owe him £5." And you say: "Dere dat tiresome Pelican. He owe me £5." It make unpleasant between us. So I take dis as gift.'"

When Spencer Tried Vegetarianism.

Herbert Spencer tried vegetarianism for about a year, says London Opinion. "At the end of that time," he relates, "I went over all that I had written during the year and consigned it to the fire." Spencer found an exclusively vegetarian diet too bulky, and came to the conclusion that rational life is a compromise. In the matter of diet it is best to strike the happy mean, "between the tiger pacing its cage and the cow lying upon the grass."

Old Hickory.

The fifth grade class in history stories had been studying about Andrew Jackson, from his boyhood up. Finally the day came for them to write all they had learned of this great man. Bert, a bright little fellow of nine years, wrote among other interesting things:

"Andrew Jackson was called 'Old Hickory' because when he was a boy he was a little tough."—New York Tribune.

MUTTON, MONEY AND DRESS.

Eccentric Henry Cavendish and Some of His Queer Ways.

Whenever Henry Cavendish, the famous English chemist and physicist, entertained his guests he would always give them the same fare—a leg of mutton. A story goes that one day when four friends were coming it was asked him what should be ordered for dinner. He answered, "A leg of mutton." "Sir," was the reply, "that will not be enough for five." Well, then, get two," said the host.

When this eccentric gentleman died he was the largest holder of bank stock in England. He owned £1,157,000 in different public funds, besides freehold property of £8,000 a year and a balance of £50,000 on account. This large income was allowed to accumulate without attention. On one occasion, when the bankers had in hand a balance of £80,000, they thought it well to acquaint Mr. Cavendish with the fact.

"If it is any trouble to you I will take it out of your hands. Do not come here to plague me."

"Not the least trouble to us, sir, but we thought you might like some of it to be invested."

"Well, what do you want to do?"

"Perhaps you would like half of it invested?"

"Do so, do so, and do not come here to bother me or I'll remove it," was the churlish finale of the interview.

Cavendish was seventy-eight years of age when he died in 1810, and he had never changed the fashion of his dress for sixty years.—London Graphic.

ODDITIES IN NAMES.

The Old English Puritans Indulged In Some Curious Freaks.

Referring to an article on the unusual Christian name as an aid to fame, a correspondent kindly submits some specimen names for perplexed parents.

In 1878 a London journal announced the marriage of a lady whose first name was—take a deep breath—Tetuanuireiaiteruiatea, but it omitted to mention what she was called in the bosom of the family. Among the Dublin marriage licenses, too, the name Atleanadiolagra occurs. And as lately as 1895 a Dorinda Cassandra appeared in the London Times. With such names one could hardly fail to get into the papers.

Odd combinations of names resulted from the system of nomenclature followed by the Puritans. James Brome in his "Travels Over England, Scotland and Wales," published in 1700, gives a copy of a "Jury Return Made at Rye, Sussex, in the Late Rebellious, Troublesome Times." The names of the twelve good men and true were Meek Brewer, Graceful Harding, Killsin Pimple, Earth Adams, Weep-not Billing, More Fruit Fowler, Hope-for Bending, Return Spelman, Fly Debate Roberts, Stand Fast on High Stringer, Be Faithful Joiner and Fight the Good Fight of Faith White.

How a present day justice would enjoy himself if a jury named in this style were called before him!—London Chronicle.

Wonderful Earthworms.

As Darwin long ago showed, the earthworm is the farmer's friend. Its burrows drain and aerate the soil, while the earth which has passed through its body is finely divided and is constantly being brought to the surface from lower levels. Its body is adapted to the burrowing habit. The pointed head end is devoid of feelers and eyes, and the foot stumps are only represented by rows of bristles, which can be felt if the finger be passed along the body from back to front. There are no jaws, but the muscular part of the digestive tube acts as a kind of pump for taking in food. This includes plants and animals. It has a small gizzard, which contains many stones, and these are used instead of teeth to grind the food.—Chicago Herald.

A Lesson In Politeness.

Armed with a subpoena a deputy sheriff went out to serve it on a wealthy and extremely snobbish manufacturer, whom he met at the gate of the manufacturer's country home. The great man was in an automobile, accompanied by two ladies, and as the process server handed over the papers he politely raised his hat. The other assumed a democratic manner. "You don't need to take off your hat to me, young man," he said. "I took off my hat not to you, sir," was the answer, "but to the ladies with you."—Argonaut.

A Word to Parents.

Never amuse your children at the expense of other people. Never allow your children to ridicule other people. Neglect this advice and the time will assuredly come when these children will amuse themselves with your foibles and ridicule your authority.—Exchange.

TURKEY IS A SELF-SUSTAINING FORAGER

Turkeys Cannot Stand Confinement.

(By E. VAN DENTHUYSEN.)

There is no other kind of live stock that will return so large a profit to the successful producer as will poultry, and no kind of poultry is more profitable than turkeys when handled properly.

The fact that turkeys will, from the time that they are six weeks old till winter sets in, gain the greater part of their entire living from bugs, grasshoppers and waste grain that they pick up in their wanderings over the range, assures their existence through this period at little or no cost to the grower.

They may be termed self-sustaining foragers where they have sufficient range.

The chance of profit in the production of turkeys is gradually improving as a result of a more general use of the flesh.

There cannot be much opportunity for growing poults to maturity when they are hatched late in the season, they may be sold for broilers at a good profit.

No dish is more valued in our large cities at the present time than broiled poults.

Turkeys that are hatched early in the spring would grow to weigh from fourteen to twenty pounds by Thanksgiving week.

These weights are often exceeded by the best growers, but as they are the most popular and the most readily produced they are suggested as the most advisable.

The average yield of turkey hens is from eighteen to thirty eggs, each of which can usually be counted on to produce a living poult.

The question of profit from keeping turkeys simply resolves itself into the ability of the grower to bring them to marketable size. This can readily be done if care and attention be given to all the requirements of success.

Six standard varieties are more or less grown in this country: Bronze, Narragansett, Buff, Slate, White and Black.

The main differences are in size and color of plumage. The Bronze and the Narragansett are the largest, the Buff and Slate are the medium, and the Black and White the smallest.

Much improvement has been made in the size of the Whites of late, and they have moved up to contend for first position, some of them having passed the thirty-pound mark.

The same statement may be soon made of the Black, as they have greatly improved during the past few years.

In addition to the foregoing there is the nonstandard variety known as the Bourbon Reds. They might well claim the position now held by the Buff turkeys, being quite like them and more largely grown for the market than are Buffs.

GRASS AND GRIT FOR CHICKS

Small Quantity of Meat Cut In Small Pieces Should Also Be Given—Temperature of Brooder.

It is well to have some finely chopped up grass and some coarse grit for the chicks and a small quantity of meat cut up in tiny pieces, or some of the manufactured foods that contain meat will help to grow them wonderfully.

The temperature of the sleeping compartment of the brooder should be at about ninety degrees during the first three of four days. The temperature should be taken about half way between the floor and the top of the brooder.

At the end of four days the heat should be decreased gradually until the young birds are three weeks old, when 70 degrees at night will be sufficient.

Avoid Horse Meat.

We are opposed to feeding horse meat to fowls. The meat from a healthy horse, killed on account of some accident, is no doubt safe, but the bulk of horse meat comes from horses that have died or been killed on account of some ailment.

SELECTION OF THE MONEY-MAKING HENS

A Year's Work Before Her.

Can you tell the "boarder" from the steady layer in your flock? Can you tell the hen that lays 30 eggs a year at a time when they sell at retail for 18 cents a dozen from the hen that lays six times that number and at the right time?

The hen that produces three or four eggs a week, and is on the job nearly all the year around, is always hustling. She's the first hen off the roost in the morning and the last one on at night. She is always foraging, following the plow in the spring in search of grubs and cutworms, roaming the woods and fields during the summer, devouring many injurious insects, busily gleaning about the threshing machine or gorging herself on weed seeds in the fall.

She is the hen that is unafraid, the hen with the bright eye and the scarlet comb. She is always singing as she works, and is always at work, scratching away for dear life, making her own living.

During the winter months you will find her on the sunny side of the straw stack, working busily, while her unproductive sisters sit huddled together with closed eyes in some protected corner of the barnyard. She is always alert, wide-awake and hungry, this model egg machine. She does not set early in the season, and if she does, she is easily broken up.

If you visit her upon the roost at night, you will find her crop full to bursting with the food which means vital warmth in winter and ample nourishment at all times. And if you seize this opportunity to examine her pelvic bones, you will find them soft and pliable, and set well apart, while her boarding neighbor near by has a half-empty crop, and hard, unyielding pelvic bones, set close together.

Watch your flock closely, learn their habits and their language. They are as individual in their habits and characteristics as so many women. Find and keep the hard worker and full feeder, the "early bird" hen, who is always in good condition, and consign her overfat, unproductive sister to the stew kettle or the butcher's shop.

Then every hen on the farm may cock her saucy head on one side in an alert, businesslike manner as if to say: "Look at me. I earn my living." And you, looking at your paid-up bills, and the new clothes, shoes and schoolbooks and the small luxuries for the wife and children, will gladly say: "Yes, you are a noble example of the Great American Hen."

Not Much to Worry About.

STREET REPAIR WORK RECOMMENDED

Improvements to a great number of streets were recommended by the common council on Friday night. This work will be done with all expediency by the street superintendent. The council also approved the mayor's plan for a change in the method of paying for the high school bonds. All the aldermen were present.

Requisitions from city officials and departments were read and referred to the committee on supplies.

A petition was received for a sewer in Wiltwyck avenue and Van Gaasbeek street. Referred to the city engineer to prepare ordinance.

Claims of Thomas Lavelle for $2,000 for being struck by a falling tree on McEntee street and of Mary Dee for $300 for damages to her house on Stephan street were read and referred to the corporation counsel to defend.

Bills and claims against the city were read and referred to the committee on auditing accounts. General bills were reported as audited by the auditing committee and warrants were ordered issued for the several amounts.

The committee on street department submitted the following report:

Relative to the many resolutions concerning street improvements and repairs, cross walks, catch basins, etc., referred to your committee on streets, sewers and water supply, we respectfully report that together with the mayor, city engineer and superintendent of streets, we made a complete tour of the city and examined conditions generally and in particular those sections and streets where improvements and repairs are called for by such resolutions, and as a result we find that to perform all the work required thereby would occupy the street force for more than the present season, exclusive of much other necessary work. Your committee therefore determined to modify certain resolutions calling for scarifying and topdressing where possible to repairing and fixing, and where necessary oiling, so that the streets will be in good condition. There were other points visited not covered by resolutions, that need repairs and your committee take the liberty of recommending such repairs in this report. There is not sufficient moneys available at this time to go into any extensive paving or tarvia treatment, but paving with blocks on hand will be done as far as possible, as it is a difficult matter with limited funds to properly care for or permamently improve seventy-five miles of streets.

In this connection, your committee wish to commend favorably Superintendent of Streets Van Keuren, on the good work done and being done in the face of many difficulties and on his willingness and promptness in emergencies, in his efforts to co-operate with the aldermen and in his evident desire to serve the interests of the city at large.

Your committee report favorably therefore and recommend that the superintendent of streets be directed to proceed and carry out as far as practicable work on streets as follows:

Clinton avenue—Topdress and put in good condition from Main street to the brick pavement on Fair or North Front street.

Brown avenue—Repair and topdress from Elmendorf street to Downs street.

Hasbrouck avenue—Repair and treat with oil from Garden street to East Chester street on east side of trolley track.

Moore street—Repair and put in good condition to Second avenue and up Second avenue to McCardle property.

Third avenue—Scarify and re-roll from the U. & D. crossing to High street.

Willow street—Instead of building culvert, repair and fix it so that water will not lodge there.

Crane street—Repair and treat with heavy oil and screenings.

East Strand—Repair and put in good condition from end of brick pavement to Abruyn street.

Chambers street—Topdress and roll.

East Pierpont street—Pave with granite blocks on hand, from Broadway to Chambers street.

Ravine street—Topdress and roll from Abeel street to German street.

Spring street—Topdress from Wurts to Hone streets.

Abeel street—Repair and treat with heavy oil and screenings for full length through Wilbur to the city line.

West Chestnut—Instead of tarvia treatment at this time, repair and put in good condition.

Montrepose avenue—Topdress and roll from Chestnut street to Chester street.

McEntee street and Hone street junction—Concrete not laid there for brick, topdress and roll it when the rest of the street is being graded.

McEntee street—Grade and topdress according to ordinance and that the city engineer report estimate and plans therefor.

West Pierpont street—Repair and treat with oil from Adams street to Ravine street and build catch basin at south east corner of Pierpont and Hone streets.

Brewster street—Repair and put in good condition.

Van Buren street—Build catch basin near the Charles Davis property.

Snyder avenue—Construct cross walk at corner of Hurley avenue.

Emerson street—Topdress and roll according to ordinance, and city engineer report estimate and plans therefor.

Green street—Build catch basin on at head of St. James street.

Washington avenue—Removal of trees from near the corner of North Front, referred to superintendent of streets to confer with Kingston Consolidated Railroad Company and Kingston Gas and Electric Company to share part of expense.

Tannery Brook—Covering and piping. City engineer directed to report in detail thereon.

Grand View Heights, Improvement—Progress reported and city engineer directed to report to this committee.

Alderman Schick said he was glad for what the committee had done for him but did not think has ward had been treated fairly. There were but two short stretches to be fixed in the Third Ward and the residents were complaining to him every day as to the horrible condition of the streets there. While he would not object to the other work recommended by the committee and would vote aye for the benefit of the general public it looked like discrimination against some of the alderman. President Connelly said there had been no work ordered done in the Eleventh Ward, which he represented but the committee had probably done the best it could under the circumstances. Clerk Cummings said the committee had over one hundred resolutions to consider. The reort was finally adopted.

The committee on gas, electricity and lighting approved of the report of the ways and means committee submitted at the last meeting for the installation of new lights. Adopted.

The special committee which investigated the claim of Crosby Kelly for a rebate on his special assessment for sewer advised that a rebate of $57.50 be granted. Mr. Kelly had built 900 feet of sewer in Emerson street at his own expense. Adopted.

Street Superintendent Van Keuren reported that he had made purchases during the month of $539.92. Referred to auditing committee.

City Engineer Codwise reporting on the resolution of Dr. Connelly as to the best plans for the elimination of the West Shore crossing on Broadway, stated that in his judgment the best one would be for depressing the tracks thereby eliminating all grade crossings within the city limits. Referred to the railroad committee.

The board of water commissioners submitted the report of Mr. Woodling, the accountant, who had made an examination of the books. He reported the gross earnings for the year of $82,000 and net income $53,370. Filed.

An inquiry to the mayor as to whether the city had a municipal flag was referred. Another communication inquired if the city of Kingston would care to have a Kingston Day at the New York state building at the San Francisco exposition. All Kingstonians were requested to make the building their headquarters while at the fair the communication read. Referred to ways and means committee.

The Chamber of Commerce sent in a resolution adopted at its last meeting recommending action on the regulation of jitney busses. Referred to committee on laws and rules and mayor and corporation counsel.

The board of education transmitted a resolution adopted at its meeting in approval of the plan of the mayor for paying the bonds for the new high school. Another resolution called for $30,000 for equipment of the building. Both were referred to the ways and means committee.

The following resolutions were then introduced:

By Alderman Mitchell, that Ann street be topdressed and rolled. Referred to street superintendent.

By Alderman Leverich, that an incandescent light be placed on North street near Gardner's brickyard. Referred to ways and means committee.

By Alderman Martin, that the street superintendent fill holes on Main and Pearl streets. Referred to street superintendent with power.

By Alderman Moyle, that Lew Fischer of the Broadway Casino be directed to lay sidewalk in front of that building. Carried.

By Alderman Jenks, that the street superintendent fill holes and oil Dunne street. Referred to street superintendent.

By Alderman Myers, that street superintendent fill holes on South Clinton avenue. Referred with power.

By Alderman Jenks, that street superintendent repair wall in the Twaalfskill brook. Referred to street superintendent.

By Alderman Schilp, that an arc light be placed on Third avenue at the railroad crossing and the incandescent light be discontinued. Referred to the ways and means committee.

By Alderman Mitchell, that the street superintendent repair railing on the high road. Referred to street superintendent.

By Alderman Moyle, that the street superintendent repair cobble gutter on north side of Orchard street. Referred to street superintendent.

By Alderman Martin, that the Kingston Gas and Electric Company be requested to extend its gas main on Hurley avenue to the city limits. Referred to the lighting committee.

By Alderman Martin, that the street superintendent repair the catch basin at the corner of Washington avenue and Lucas avenue as it is in dangerous condition. Referred to street superintendent with power.

By Alderman McKittrick, that chief of police notify property owners on Albany avenue from Manor avenue to TenBroeck's lane to lay curb and gutter. Carried, and referred to chief of police.

By Alderman Martin, that the street superintendent scarify and roll Hurley avenue before oiling it. Referred to street superintendent.

By Alderman Leverich, that the street superintendent repair wall at Gill and Yeoman streets. Referred to street superintendent.

The council then adjourned.

ELLENVILLE.

Ellenville, May 8.—Rev. E. E. Count, D. D., will occupy the pulpit of the Reformed Church on Sunday morning and evening.

REVISED FIGURES SHOW 1,364 LOST

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, May 8.—Basing their estimates on the British admiralty's announcement that only 703 passengers and sailors of the Lusitania had been saved, local officials of the Cunard line stated this afternoon that the death list would total 1,364.

The revised lists they stated showed 1,251 passengers on the liner, while the crew numbered 816, a total of 2,067. The local officials said the announcement in London that the Lusitania carried 2,160 persons was undoubtedly an error, due to incorrect passenger lists.

The statement of the local office explains the discrepancy between the New York figures of the number lost, and those of London, the latter being 1,457.

COUNT OKUMA.

ELDER JAPANESE STATESMAN, OPPOSED TO JAPAN'S DEMANDS ON CHINA, MAY CAUSE COUNT OKUMA, JAPAN'S PREMIER'S, RETIREMENT.

Tokio, May 8.—It is reported here that the elder statesmen are about to start a movement which may result in the retirement of the recently chosen Premier of Japan, Count Okuma. Rumor has it that they consider Japan's demands on China, which now threaten to cause a war between the two countries, as entirely too stringent.

LOCAL DEATH RECORD.

Recent Deaths and Funerals of Persons in This Vicinity.

Alanson Stephens of Ohioville, aged about 48 years, was found dead in bed on Wednesday morning. He seemed as well as usual the night before but his health had not been good for six months. His wife survives him.

Mrs. Mary A. O'Connor of Eddyville died this morning after a brief illness. Besides her husband, John V. O'Connor, who survives her, she leaves her father, John Ryan, and one brother, William Ryan of Whitehall, N. Y.,

Mrs. Adolph Motrie Metzger died on Friday in this city. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. James Buchanan, and one brother, Henry Motrie. The funeral will be held from the residence of her sister at 229 West Chestnut street, on Monday morning at 9 o'clock and from St. Peter's Church at 9:30.

Gerrit Smith, aged 76 years, died on Tuesday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Edgar P. Foster, in Amityville, Long Island. He was the inventor of the quadruplex system of telegraphing and had been employed by the Western Union Telegraph Company for fifty-four years. Ten years ago he retired on a pension. While acting as electrical engineer for that company Mr. Smith devised the system of sending more than one message over the wire at the same time and on account of the importance of the discovery was sent to Europe to promote it. He is survived by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Foster, and one son, Charles E. Smith, of Saugerties. The funeral was held Thursday evening.

GRAND COUNCIL OF KNIGHTS OF ST. JOHN

The annual convention of the New York Grand Council of the Knights of St. John, which comprises all the councils east of Syracuse to New York, will be opened at St. Peter's school hall on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. At 10 o'clock the convention will adjourn and the visiting lieutenants and delegates will form in line and proceed to St. Peter's Church where they will attend mass. The procession will be headed by Colonel Ehlider and staff. St. Peter's Commandery No. 56, of Poughkeepsie, St. Mary's Commandery, No. 145 of Saugerties, and St. Peter's Commandery, No. 317, of this city. At the conclusion of the services the delegates will go by trolley to Hotel Weiner where they will partake of dinner.

The afternoon session will open at 1:30 o'clock and the business of the district will be transacted. It is expected that addresses will be made by Colonel Wermuth of Poughkeepsie, M. X. Alston, G. J. A., of St. Benedict's Council, colored, of New York, Grand Treasurer Kernan, Saugerties; Major Honikel, Albany, and Lieutenant Colonel Freiling, Schenectady.

The order of the Knights of St. John was founded in 1048 A. D., when some Catholic merchants of the city of Annapolis in the kingdom of Naples, who were trading in the east, built in Jerusalem a house of refuge for pilgrims to the holy lands. To this they soon added a church and hospital in honor of St. John the Baptist. This was the beginning of the illustrious order of the Knights of St. John. In the United States the order was incorporated by a special act of the legislature on May 6, 1886. In the supreme commandery there are now 16 grand commanderies and many subordinate commanderies, some of which are located in Canada and the West Indies. The organization is semi-military, benevolent and religious in its mission. St. Peter's Commandery will be represented at the convention by Captain Joseph Zeeh and Secretary J. R. Howard.

SOCIETY NOTES.

The telephone call of Mrs. C. N. Reed, society news reporter for The Freeman, has been changed to 1012-W.

Mrs. Alden J. Harcourt of Mt. Vernon, formerly of Kingston, who has been the guest of her mother, Mrs. Albert Terry for the past week, delightfully entertained at a progressive luncheon at Mrs. Terry's on Broadway on Friday afternoon. Covers were laid for sixteen and the decorations were spring flowers.

Miss Maria Reis was given a delightful surprise at her home on Ridge street on Friday afternoon by twenty of her little friends. The afternoon was passed in playing games and singing. Piano solos were rendered by Maria Reis, Elsie Emig, Iva Finley, Elizabeth Huber, Helen Schrowang. Refreshments were served. When the guests returned to their home it was the unanimous opinion that all had had a most enjoyable time.

Master Frank Race, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Race of Henry street, was the host at a very happy children's party given this afternoon in honor of his sixth birthday. Games were played and delicious refreshments served. Pink and white flowers formed the decorations, and each little guest received a little hand-painted box of goodies for his or her favor. Of course there was a fine birthday cake with lighted candles. Master Race's young friends remembered him with many pretty birthday gifts.

McEnelly's famous orchestra, which will play at the armory on Tuesday evening, May 11, has arranged a program of concert music which they will render from 8 to 9, preceding the dancing, which will start at the latter hour. The armory employes have artistically decorated the big drill shed for the dance, which promises to eclipse anything that Company M has undertaken. Every detail to make the last dance a big success has been gone into, and those people arranging to attend this event are already promised a most enjoyable evening.

McElhenny-DeWitt.

Miss Nina DeWitt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry DeWitt, and Eugene McElhenny, son of Mr. and Mrs. David McElhenny, were married on Thursday in Wallkill by the Rev. Father Holland. They departed on a wedding trip to Kingston and other places and will resided in Wallkill on their return.

Martin-Adams.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at St. John's Episcopal Church, Wall street, this morning at nine o'clock, when Miss Florence Anne Adams of Ulster Park became the bride of Eugene Martin of Port Ewen, the Rev. Charles F. Kennedy, rector of the church, officiating. The bride wore a charming gown of white satin entraine with veil and carried a large bouquet of bride roses. Mrs. M. Ross was the only attendant. Mr. and Mrs. Martin will make their home in Ulster Park.

Frohman's Body Found.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

London, May 8.—A Queenstown dispatch states that the body of Charles Frohman, the famous American theatrical manager, who was a passenger on the Lusitania, has been found.

Couldn't See the Wisdom.

Little Jack was found in the pantry covered with jam. His father said, "I think, my boy, you would better go and show yourself to mother." With a roguish look Jack replied, "No, daddy, I think I betterent."

FIRST TORPEDO BLEW UP BOILERS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Queenstown, May 8.—Coastguards who witnessed the destruction of the Lusitania from shore declared that the first torpedo had evidently caused the great liner's boilers to blow up. They said that great volumes of smoke and steam shot skyward, completely hiding the ship. The fact that the Lusitania sank so rapidly indicated that her bottom had been torn out by an internal explosion.

RALPH STROUD.

"GOLIATH" ALEXANDER THE GREAT, MEETS HIS DAVID.

Philadelphia, May 8.—Fans are still talking about the manner in which an unknown amateur from the west outpitched and beat for the first time this season Phillie's phenom twirler, Alexander, the great.

Ralph Stroud, the man sent in by McGraw, of the Giants, to the amusement and later the consternation of the local bleacherites, was picked up by the Giant's leader on the Pacific coast last fall.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Kingston Branch, American Independence Union, will hold a regular meeting on Monday evening at 8 o'clock at the Hotel Eichler.

The Queen Esther meeting of Trinity M. E. Church has been postponed to May 14. The meeting will be held at the home of Miss Minerva Van Gaasbeck at that time.

ABOUT THE FOLKS.

Alden J. Harcourt of Mt. Vernon is spending the week end with Mrs. Harcourt and children at the home of Mrs. Harcourt's mother, Mrs. Terry on Broadway.

Mrs. Young, who has been spending the winter at the home of her daughter in the west, has returned to her home on West Chestnut street for the summer.

Appreciated.

AMERICAN LINER REPORTED SAFE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Liverpool, May 8.—The American liner New York has not been torpedoed as rumored in New York today. She was reported off Liverpool today and will dock tomorrow. She probably passed through the waters where the Lusitania was sunk.

PROBLEM CONFRONTS U. S. GOVERNMENT

By Telegraph to The Freeman

Washington, May 8.—The U. S. today is face to face with the problem of whether it will hold Germany to "strict accountability" for the loss of American life in the torpedoing of the Lusitania.

The American policy has not yet been determined upon but the reply sent to Germany by the U. S. when the former announced her submarine policy and her war zone blockade furnishes a basis on which the American policy can be forecasted. Whether that position will be maintained by the American government in dealing with the Lusitania incident is the question.

President Wilson will take no precipitate action. He is awaiting all possible information regarding the tragedy before determining on procedure.

Senator Stone of Missouri, chairman of the foreign relations committee, commenting today on the destruction of the Lusitania said:

"The sinking of the Cunarder Lusitania is indeed sad. But how could it possibly affect our present European policy? Germany has a right to sink or do anything she pleases with British vessels and Great Britain has the same rights with respect to those of Germany. This applies to merchantmen as well as war vessels, so long as they belong to a belligerent.

"Of course,, the Lusitania is the largest ship that has been attacked but it makes no difference whether the ship be large or small, the same principle holds."

The senator indicated that this would apply in case of Americans on an enemy ship sunk by the Germans.

The President went out golfing this morning but left word with his White House attaches to send out any new details that were received to the links. No special cabinet meeting has been called. Administration officials do not conceal their apprehension that American public opinion may be inflamed to a high pitch by the disaster and may demand immediate action. There is a tendency in some circles, however, to minimize the international phase of the disaster, on the score that the Lusitania was an English vessel and that American passengers upon her were warned of peril. It is declared the torpedoing of the Gulflight furnishes a graver complication because it was an American vessel

The issue involved in the sinking of the Lusitania is similar to the case of the Falaba, an English vessel which was torpedoed and upon which an American citizen, Leon S. Thrasher, was killed. It is therefore probable that the Thrasher case and the Lusitania tragedy will be considered together in whatever action the American government may take.

Rumors are flying about today that the President may call an extra session of congress to consider the matter, but these reports are without foundation.

Sensation in Berlin.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Berlin, May 8.—News of the sinking of the Lusitania by a German submarine, printed here in big type today, caused a great sensation. The tenor of the editorial comment was that a severe lesson has been administered to England.

Boxing With the Feet.

The form of boxing known as "la savate," in which the feet are used as well as the fists and kicks are as legitimate as blows, has for a long time been a popular exercise in French gymnasia and schools of arms. The first principle is that the whole weight of the body shall be placed on one leg and that the farthest from the adversary. The disengaged leg is used as an adjunct to the fists and flies out with astonishing swiftness and accuracy of aim. The "coup de savate" proper is the "chasse" off the right foot or "shin hit," a dangerous blow, but one that is easily avoided by raising the left knee to the level of the waist. Formidable as this method of assault and others, such as the "coup d'arret," or straight stop hit, and the "coup de figure," or swinging face kick, may be and undoubtedly are with an expert, the parries and guards are simple and sure if properly used.—Washington Star.

Commas.

The French do not as a rule employ inverted commas to indicate a dialogue, but they employ the dash to indicate a change of speakers, which is just as bad. Certainly many punctuation marks are sadly misused or overused. Dickens flung unnecessary commas all over his pages—whole battalions of them. Walter Pater also employed them with extraordinary prodigality, frequently before the word "and" where the conjunction rendered them superfluous. Pater was also overfond of the mark of exclamation, so that when he drops a "Yes" into his measured style it must needs appear as "Yes!" But, though the Bible does without inverted commas, there is real art in its punctuation. How admirably it marks the cadence and helps the drama in that great story of the prodigal son!—London Tit-Bits.

Points for Mothers

Adornment and Care of Nursery.

Children delight in change, and this applies to pictures as well as to other things. If an expensive picture is in the room and a contagious disease affects the child it is impractical to destroy the picture, and yet that may be desirable. As the child grows in knowledge the pictures, if not expensive, may be changed to suit the child's need.

Boys like good pictures. When a little fellow fills his room with undesirable pictures it is nearly always because others have not been obtainable. They like pictures with life in them, such as the Remington type, and their choice should be followed in this.

Until the child is of such age that it can be trusted alone portieres or heavy curtains should be dispensed with. At best they are industrious dust collectors and are more of a menace than a necessity. If they are used they should be of rather light material and so placed that there is no possible danger from fire. Hung near to a gas jet, they are a constant source of danger.

The rooms should be frequently and thoroughly cleaned, and in this procedure the child should be early taught to co-operate. All dusting must be done with a slightly dampened cloth or with a lamb's wool duster, both of which will collect the dust and will not simply scatter it.

Slightly wet salt or sawdust scattered upon the floor before sweeping will prevent to a great extent the raising of dust. One of the various preparations which are made for this purpose and which are very inexpensive will prove effective, and in addition they bring out the colors of the carpet if the floor has such a covering.

Why Children Tell Untruths.

Because a child tells an untruth he is not of necessity a liar. An apparent untruth may be told because the child is timid under examination and, losing control of himself, says what he does not mean. Adults commonly do this in courts. To the child questioning is often as much dreaded as the witness chair is to an adult. Other children tell untruths because they are absent minded. It is common for them to do so, because they do not fully understand the question put to them. These facts seem simple enough, and yet if they are not recognized the child may be falsely accused of lying, and his nervous system will suffer thereby.

Romance weaving is not uncommon among children who are blest with vivid imaginations. The difficulty is that the child has not been taught to make distinctions between the truths of allegory and those of fact. The imagination is valuable, but needs early guidance, so that it will not be the master, but the servant of the child.

The desire to appear prominently before others (a dramatic instinct) is often the cause of romance weaving. The best way to treat this latter is to receive the statements of the child without comment and without apparent interest. When he finds that he has not an appreciative audience he will be cured of this habit. In a few instances the fault indicates some impending illness, or it may be due to lack of control, which is marked in nervous children after an acute illness. Parents should show considerable patience toward children who are apparent liars, and every effort should be made to determine whether there is a physical basis for the moral fault.

When Traveling.

When starting on a trip, no matter how short, the farseeing mother or nurse should remember to take along some of the Japanese flower seeds which, when put into water, spring into blossom. A pair of blunt scissors, an assortment of pictures, a blank book and a tube of glue is another suggestion for an inexpensive remembrance. It is most often not the costly toy or trinket that gives the most enjoyment.

Any child starting off on a trip would appreciate a small leather portfolio to fit into the traveling case and would like to find a fountain pen, a book of postage stamps and several postal cards done up in an attractive package, with a box of bonbons. No matter how inexpensive the gift, one must remember that pretty ribbons, paper and general wrappings will play a large part in the pleasure the gift brings to the little traveler.

No Work Before Breakfast.

No work which is at all exacting or difficult should be undertaken by the child before breakfast, and this rule applies to mental effort as surely as to physical. If the curriculum of the child's school demands study in the early morning it should be prepared for such mental effort by a suitable meal. There can be no objection to a short walk or to some form of light exercise at this time, but the more serious duties of the day must be delayed until after the morning meal.

Bathtub Toys.

If baby is afraid of the water when having his bath buy several prettily colored cork bobbers, such as fishermen use, and throw these in the bathtub. He will be so busy trying to catch them that he will forget to be afraid and, instead, will be highly entertained.

Appropriately Named.

Of course the morning-glory derives its name from the fact that it blooms only in the morning, and the "four-o'clocks," because they close at that hour in the afternoon.

THE TURKISH BABY.

Odd Customs Attend Upon His Birth and His First Bath.

A Turkish baby looks very queer in his odd dress. He wears over his shirt a kind of padded gown, something like a bathrobe, and on his little head he wears a bright red silk cap with a tassel of seed pearls. To keep all evil away from the baby one or more charms are fastened to the tassel.

His arms and legs are bound tightly after they are straightened out by his nurse, and when he is all fixed he is put in a little bed and covered with several warm pads. In addition to this a thin red veil is put over all.

When he is all ready his father comes in to see him for the first time. If the child is a boy, the father is doubly pleased. He takes the child up very tenderly in his arms and carries him out of the room. Just outside the door he rests a minute and prays. After he prays three times he repeats the name chosen for the baby and this is the way the baby is christened.

When the child is three days old a celebration is held and old women who make a regular business of this go to the different houses inviting the ladies to the party. At each house they tell the day of his birth and the name of the baby and urge the people to come.

On the day of the celebration the people arrive from early in the morning until late in the afternoon. Nearly all bring presents for the baby's mother, and each person as she gives her present to the mother expresses a pleasant wish for the child.

They hardly notice the baby, for the mother is afraid of bad luck if too much attention is paid to it. The few who do look at him say how ugly he is or something like that and this delights the mother, who knows they do not mean what they say.

If the parents are rich sweet sherbet or coffee and candies, cakes and ices are served as refreshments. If they are poor coffee and fruits are offered, but the entertainment is much the same. The ladies talk and laugh and eat until they are ready to leave.

Another great event is the baby's first bath. This happens when he is eight days old, and his mother and her friends may have a bath, too, if they wish. The baby bathes first, then his mother and then the visitors. This bath takes a long time and all the time slaves play sweet music and food is served three or four times.—Portland Oregonian.

British Soldiers' Pay.

The English war office gives some interesting information concerning how the soldier is paid, whatever the circumstances of his service.

In the trenches of course there is not much use for money, but while he remains on the firing line the soldier's accounts are kept by his company officers, and he can make withdrawals when convenient.

A statement of his financial position follows him into the hospital, and his banker is then the medical officer in charge. On furlough during convalescence there is a special paymaster. Pay due to a soldier killed in action is dealt with as part of the estate and sent to the next of kin.—Philadelphia North American.

A Curious Error.

The Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale told how a curious error crept into the translation of the Lord's Prayer into the Delaware Indian tongue. The English translator had as an assistant an Indian who knew English. "What is 'hallow' in Delaware?" asked the translator. The Indian thought he said "halloo" and gave him the equivalent. Therefore the Delaware version of the Lord's Prayer reads, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallooed be thy name."

Alabama's Capitals.

When Alabama was a territory its capital was at St. Stephens, in Washington county. The convention that framed the constitution under which it was admitted into the Union was held in Huntsville, where the first legislature met in October, 1819, and the first governor was inaugurated. Cahaba became the seat of government in 1820. In 1825 the capital was removed to Tuscaloosa, and in 1846 it was again removed, this time to Montgomery.

Witness My Hand.

In the early days only a few scholars knew how to write. It was then customary to sign a document by smearing the hand with ink and impressing it upon the paper, accompanied by the words, "Witness my hand." Afterward the seal was introduced as a substitute for the hand mark and was used with the words above quoted, the two forming the signature. This is the origin of the expression as used in modern documents.

Placing Himself.

The Tramp—No, ma'am; it isn't true that we have a hobo organization. That's newspaper talk. At the same time I'll admit I'm a p. m. of the P. S. O. U. The Housewife—Why, what's that? The Tramp—Perpetual member of the Permanent Society of Unemployed.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Eye of the Beholder.

He—Miss Oldgirl is looking particularly well just now. She doesn't appear a day over twenty-five. She—Is that so? Well, if she looks that way to you it's time you got a pair of glasses. There is something wrong with your sight.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

No worthy enterprise can be done by us without continual plodding and wearisomeness to our faint and sensitive abilities.—Milton.

Domesday Book.

According to Stone's Chronicle the title of Domesday Book arose from the circumstance that the original document was kept in a place in Westminister cloisters called Domus Dei, or House of God.

CUTTING THE SEED CROP.

It is not an uncommon practice for the farmer to allow the seed crop to remain on the fields an excessive period, in order that more of the green pods may develop. In such fields on the same plant are found ripe pods bursting open, as well as fully developed, half grown and newly forming pods.

Observations show that many of the chalcis flies infesting the earlier or first pods have had sufficient time to complete their life development, emerge from the seeds and deposit their eggs into the green pods growing on the same plant upon which they themselves were fostered.

In view of this the seed crop should be so handled that the setting of pods will be as uniform as possible, and the crop should then be harvested as soon as the larger number of the pods are ripe.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLOWING.

Depth Depends Upon Season of the Year and Kind of Soil.

The depth at which land should be plowed depends much upon the season of the year, the kind of soil and the physical condition of the subsoil. Fall plowing, except for fall sown grain, should invariably be deeper than spring plowing, as there is more time for it to become sufficiently settled and compacted. Whenever land is plowed quite deeply and the climatic conditions do not thoroughly settle the furrows it should be thoroughly worked before it is planted.

Heavy soils need to be plowed deeper than the lighter types of soils. Such soils usually have quite compact subsoils, and they are benefited by being brought to the surface. It is also a benefit to heavy soils to bury the vegetable matter at a good depth, as this will assist in keeping the subsoil from becoming too compact.

Lighter soils are very much the opposite. Their subsoils are usually not too compact, and it is better to have the vegetable matter mixed with the surface soil. Deep plowing of such soils has a tendency to make them too loose, and care should be taken to thoroughly compact them before they are planted to crops.

Plowing land continuously at the same depth every time has a tendency to form a hard, compact layer in the subsoil at that depth. This is an undesirable condition and can usually be avoided by varying the depth slightly from year to year. New land when first brought under the plow should not be plowed too deeply. While it may be desirable to ultimately have a furrow six or seven inches in depth, it should be brought about gradually by plowing a half inch or so deeper every year.

Filler For Dead Furrows.

To fill the water furrow, or dead furrow, that disagreeable ditch left by the turning plow, take a peg tooth harrow and two 1 by 6 inch boards four feet long, writes P. P. Parsons of Doris, N. M., in the Missouri Valley Farmer. Set the boards between the teeth of harrow, starting them a little to the side of the center in front and slanting them so they almost meet at the back. This when drawn over the water furrow from end to end will draw the soil back into the ditch. Reverse the boards to level down the ridges. One section of an adjustable harrow with teeth set straight will do as well as a peg tooth.

SPRING CARE OF BEES.

Now is the time to remove all drone combs from the brood nest and replace them with good worker combs. If worker combs are not available, then use frames with full sheets of foundation in them.

All queenless colonies should be given young queens that can be secured from the queen breeders in the southern states, and if it is not convenient to send for them then give from some strong colony a nice comb of young brood with freshly laid eggs in it, and from these queenless colonies several good queens can be reared and the entire apiary requeened.

It's a mighty good thing to requeen the entire apiary every season, for it not only means less swarming, but more bees raised from a vigorous queen and an upbuilding of the stock.

The honey from the early fruit bloom will be the honey on which the early brood is reared, while the main supplies from the early flow will be in June from the clovers.

For this reason it is best not to place supers on the hives until the proper time arrives, though this is not an infallible rule, as one should be governed by the condition of the brood nest.

If the tops of the brood combs are filled with honey and nicely capped with new caps, then put the supers on for either comb or extracted honey.—Farm Journal.

GERMANS REPORT CAPTURE OF LIBAU

Enthusiastic Choruses.

From the very beginning of the work of rehearsing for the oratorio of "The Creation," to be given the last night of the Spring Musical Festival, the chorus at Catskill has been most enthusiastic, both men and women, under the leadership of Charles Bagley, putting in much hard and efficient work. Another chorus whose enthusiasm has been boundless is the one at Phoenicia, in which a number of singers from Pine Hill are joining, under the leadership of Mr. Ennist. This chorus has thought nothing of two rehearsals a week, and from now on will doubtless call a third rehearsal. On his visit to Phoenicia on Thursday evening, Conductor Coke-Jephcott was most encouraged and delighted with the conditions he found and the earnestness of both men and women. Many of the singers were even attempting to memorize their work, to be the better able to follow the conductor's baton. Such a musical spirit is enough to enthuse the whole big chorus. On Tuesday evening next, Conductor Coke-Jephcott will again visit the Catskill chorus. On Monday evening next, the sopranos and altos of the Kingston chorus will have a special rehearsal at the Y. M. C. A. building. On Thursday evening next, there will be a special rehearsal of the basses and tenors and on Friday evening there will be a full rehearsal at Association Hall which should be attended by every chorus member who can possibly get to the rehearsal.

Red Monograms vs. Spartans.

Weather permitting, there will be a record crowd of fans at McVey's Field Sunday afternoon to witness the game between the Red Monograms of this city and the renowned Spartans of Newburgh. The latter team has played here in previous seasons and have also played a fast, brilliant game. Scherer and Smedes will be the Monogram battery; Kissam and Young for the Spartans. Preceding this game and beginning at 1:30, the Barmann Athletic Club and the Miller Athletic Club will be the attraction in what promises to be an interesting baseball contest. The published statement that the Monogram-Spartan game would be played first is denied.

If This Is Your Birthday

May 8

The person of this birthdate has no desire to hoard his earnings, in fact he is too generous a provider for those he loves for his own good.

The man of this birthdate should never indulge in stimulants for the reason that he is strongly magnetized, with powerful developed lower nature and when under influence of intoxicants will commit crimes which in his sane mind he would consider incredible.

Because the nature is highly tensioned in both men and women they should be very careful in suspecting those they love.

They should strive to be charitable, to be true, to sustain as high a standard of honesty and truth as they demand from others and to learn the great lesson of self control.

The mental powers of this birthdate are very high and memory, will and fixity of knowledge are attributes.

RUMOR OF SINKING OF AMERICAN LINER

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, May 8.—A persistent rumor was circulated in Wall street at noon today that the American liner New York has been torpedoed off the Irish coast. The rumor was traced to a large house having important English connections, but no definite information could be secured there. At the office of the American line the rumor was characterized as a "wild report resulting from the sinking of the Lusitania."

The New York is believed to be near the Irish coast today, being due at Liverpool about noon tomorrow.

Editor Kingston Freeman,
Kingston, N. Y.

Dear sir—Under ordinary circumstances no one acquainted with Francis Childs Merritt, would dignify his remarks before the board of education, as published in your issue of Friday, May 7, 1915, with a reply, but inasmuch as your paper has been and will be read by many who will certainly never have the great pleasure of meeting this distinguished barrister, I deem it only fair to this board to give your readers the following facts, not rumors, concerning the site in question.

The property, as a whole, has never been offered for sale by the O'Reily family, or myself, to any person, corporation, or to the city of Kingston during the 66 years we have owned the same.

During the administration of the late Dr. David Kennedy, the city endeavored to purchase the whole O'Reilly tract for park purposes, and Dr. Kennedy informed me that the city would be willing to pay a sum considerable in excess of the amount received from the board of education. I then informed him as well as all others, that the property was not for sale, as a whole, and this attitude I have always maintained, although I have received more than one attractive offer, at figures largely in excess of the price paid by the city.

The statement made by Mr. DeWitt, as reported in your columns, as to the board's transactions with me is, as usual, substantially correct. The reason for accepting $55,500 for the site, was largely influenced by the fact that the property would be devoted to public and educational purposes in which my friends and the people of Ulster county, would enjoy many advantages and pleasures not accorded my generation and times, and to fulfill my promise to the many purchasers of property from the O'Reilly estate not to sell this property for purely commercial purposes.

In conclusion would say, I did not solicit the board of education, or the city of Kingston to purchase this property, and it undoubtedly would not have purchased it had there been an equal available site in the city of Kingston. Whether the city has received value for its money in this respect, may be best answered by an inspection of this property, of which the high school occupies but a very small part.

Your very truly,
C. B. O'REILLY.

AUTOMOBILE NOTES.

O. M. Kennedy, proprietor of the Central garage, has sold and delivered a Reo six touring car to Dr. E. E. Norwood of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Wood and son, Clyde, of No. 133 Fair street, accompanied by Raymond Coughlin of Washington avenue, have gone on an extended auto trip through Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, where they will be the guests of Mr. Wood's brother. They will return by way of New York city.

Stryker & Toumans are very busy at their garage and salesrooms, 75 and 77 Furnace street. The repair shop is a very busy place. Mr. Eighmey is happy in spite of the large amount of work he has on hand. The upholstering department is also rushed with work and under the direction of Foreman Ary Bush a lot of work is being completed. Cars are being sold every day. Monday a Chevrolet Baby Grand touring car, five passenger and fully equipped was sold and delivered to Lucius I. Maxon, the baker of 771 Broadway. Tuesday, a Chevrolet Baby Grand touring car, five passenger, fully equipped was sold and delivered to Samuel Weisberg, ladies' tailor, 286 Fair street. Wednesday, a six 40, 7 passenger Moon car, fully equipped and trimmed with Spanish leather was sold and delivered to Clarence Freer of 28 Franklin street. Mr. Stryker was in New York Thursday after a car load of Chevrolets and a carload of Moon cars, and has already sold one of this last shipment. Ten men are now on the pay roll at this garage.

Esopus Bathing Club Election.

The Esopus Bathing Club of Saugerties has elected John A. Snyder, president, Jay E. Klock, vice president, William Ziegler, secretary and treasurer, and Byron Hallenbeck, Theodore Eckhoff and Fred T. Lewis trustees.

In Recorder's Court.

Joseph Karbarich was arrested on Friday night by Policeman Kuehn for being drunk and begging on the streets. He got a sentence of four days when arraigned before City Judge Brinnier, who was acting as Recorder in the absence of Recorder Lang.

John Williams was arrested by Policeman Hess for disorderly conduct. He escaped with a reprimand.

Joseph Hoffman and Herman Kaplan, who claim to live in Cleveland and Buffalo respectively, were arrested on Friday night by West Shore Detective Godsell for train riding. They were discharged and ordered out of town.

Bible School Entertainment.

The fine entertainment to be given by the Bible school of the Rondout Presbyterian Church has received added glory in that Miss Los Kamp, the contralto soloist of the church, who will sing a number of selections at the entertainment to be given next Friday evening at the chapel of the church, will be one of the soloists in the artists' concert in the coming music festival the last of May. A number of readings will be given by Miss Gertrude Griffin of Flushing, N. Y., thus offering a program of most exceptional interest.

Navigation Notes.

The steamer Albany is tied up at the Mary Powell's dock at the foot of Canal street and is taking coal. In addition the interior of the boat, including the carpets, etc., are being cleaned. The boat will leave Monday for New York to be hauled out on drydock to receive further repairs.

The tug E. L. Levy came down the river this morning with the Cornell tow. The Osceola is bound up the river from New York.

One Gorgeous Wagon.

Jack Kelly of Weston's laundry is proud as a peacock over his new delivery wagon, painted in resplendent colors, which he drove about the streets today.

Examination for Promotion.

Lieutenant Richard H. Kuehn of Company M has been notified to appear at brigade headquarters in Albany on May 15 for the purpose of being examined for the position of first lieutenant.

MENKE'S DAILY SPORTING LETTER

New York, May 8.—Jack Johnson has about $100,000 stowed away just now, with the prospect of getting from $100,000 to $200,000 more through the moving picture sales of the Johnson-Willard films. This means that the once-time pugilistic king can live in style and comparative luxury for the balance of his days, if he doesn't take to throwing his money away in large chunks.

If Johnson lived at the rate of $10,000 a year (that is about $50 a day for the rest of his life), it would mean that he could live about 20 years longer and leave some money behind, even if he never got a dollar from the moving picture sales. The $100,000 that Johnson has now can be depended upon to draw interest around 6 per cent yearly. That means that within a year Johnson's 100,000 is good for $106,000 (deduct $10,000 from that for living expenses) and it leaves Johnson a balance of $96,000. That remaining $96,000 would accumulate $5,760 interest the second year. That would make a total of $101,760. Deduct from that $10,000 and it would leave Johnson $91,760 at the end of the second year. Johnson's interest income for the third year would be about $4,600 shy of his outgo, leaving him something like $87,000 to begin the fourth year with.

Continue this little system of adding six per cent interest each year and then deducting $10,000 for living expenses and it will be seen that the negro can live to a ripe old age and still have a little wad left, even if he never gets a dollar from the moving picture sales.

But he will get a wad from the moving pictures—and a big wad at that. He was shrewd enough to tie up the promoters of the bout to a contract calling for 50 per cent of the moving picture income. If the ban against moving pictures is lifted in the United States, it will mean that the gross income from the world-wide sale of the pictures will total around the $500,000 mark. If the ban isn't lifted in the United States, the income from the sale of the pictures in Cuba, Australia, the Orient and Europe will come close to $200,000. That would give Johnson about $100,000 for his divvy.

Johnson told us in Havana recently that he had "a sizeable little wad laid aside."

"I ain't been a fool," he said. "I knew that some day I would have to travel the road of all champions. That would end my earning power. I know that the only friend a man has, especially in misfortune, is money. So I decided to keep mine.

"It always made me laugh when I read stories about how I was throwing my money away. That certainly was funny. Sure, I spent money—and a lot of it. But I didn't spend one-tenth of the amount that I was credited with. It seems that every time I spent a dollar some reporter said I spent a hundred. Every bottle I bought was multiplied ten times. If I spent $10 or $15 in giving a dinner party or something like that I'd wake up the next morning to find that I'd spent about $100. That's the way it's been. Every dollar I've spent has been multiplied in an effort to show that I was the greatest little spender the world ever knew.

"But I've had sense enough to lay aside a wad. The $30,000 for the Willard fight has been added to what I'd adready laid aside. I've got some of my money well invested. I find that I can live nicely on $10,000 a year, and I know that if I live within that $10,000 annually I'll never be broke, even if I can't get a cent from the moving pictures."

Geary Case Concluded.

The evidence in the trial of the suit of Mrs. Emma B. Geary of High Falls against the Honk Falls Power Company to recover $25,000 for the death of her son, Eugene Geary, who died from injuries received in a fall from a pole on Main street in Rosendale, was all taken on Friday afternoon and supreme court took a recess until Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when both sides will sum up the case. Mrs. Geary claims that the company was negligent, which is denied. No new cases were added to the day calendar.

NO SILLY SENTIMENT.

Judge Clearwater Has No Illusions About Criminals.

The leading newspapers of the state report that Judge Clearwater, who was appointed by Senator Root chairman of the committee on State Prisons, Reformatories, Penal Institutions and the Prevention and Punishment of Crime, of the Constitutional Convention, has invited the wardens and officers of the state prisons, reformatories, penal institutions and correctional schools of the state, and all judges of courts of criminal jurisdiction and district attorneys, to send to the committee any suggestions they may wish to make relative to the prevention and punishment of crime which they think properly can be embodied in the constitution. Judge Clearwater is quoted as saying that he is rather of the opinion that the subject is one for legislative and administrative action, and not for constitutional provision, but that a contrary opinion seems largely to exist among prison reformers, and as every one has the right to be heard before a convention framing the fundamental law of the state, he intends that these people shall have an opportunity to express their views. The judge also is quoted as stating that he has no illusions and delusions about crime and criminals. That there is nothing heroic about a criminal, and there is no glamor about crime. He thinks that criminals should be well treated, well fed, properly clothed and that prisons should be sanitary, but he regards a prison as a place of punishment for wrong doing, and the imprisonment of the offender not only as a punishment, but as a deterrent to crime.

THEIR REFUGE

That is what artisans in all kinds of work have leraned to call the Want Columns—their refuge—for the Want Ads have been the means of securing them work at all seasons of the year, when every other means failed.

The reason for this is simple, for the live employer is a man who reads the Want Columns every day in search of competent help for his factory.

If you are out of work, Mr. Machinist, this month of May, why not let the live employers know that you are after a place in their establishments and you will see that your Want Ad to that effect will quickly bring you a good job.

RALLY FOLLOWS WALL STREET SLUMP

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, May 8.—The scope of the Lusitania's disaster as shown by the morning papers, induced a flood of selling orders from all parts of the country at the opening. Many wire houses were swamped with orders to sell at the market. These orders, however, were offset by the placing of buying orders all around the room on an immense scale and after acute weakness in the initial trading the organized support, as well as that naturally coming from bargain buying and investment sources, caused sharp and important rallies. The severest loss was sustained in Westinghouse Electric, which opened at 82, against 92 at the close yesterday, but in the next few minutes it advanced to 87. Movements of the general list consisted chiefly of declines ranging from 2 to 3 points at the opening, followed by almost complete recoveries. U. S. Steel common, which was regarded as determining the market course, was the scene of exciting trading all through the first 15 minutes. The opening sales were recorded as 15,000 shares from 52 to 52½, against 54½ at the close yesterday, but the stock was taken as offered from the time trading commenced and at the end of the first 15 minutes the price went back to 54. Amalgamated Copper also had a wide opening, the first sales being 2,000 shares from 65⅝ to 66½, against 68 last night, with a quick upturn to 67⅞. Canadian Pacific opened down 2¼ to 154. Bethlehem Steel fell six points to 139 and then rallied to 143, and National Lead, which started two points lower to 58, quickly rallied to 59. Before the end of the first half hour many of the important issues were only fractionally under last night's final figures.

The stock market closed firm; governments unchanged, other bonds irregular.

WATER SUPPLY NEARLY STERILE

Kingston's water supply is practically sterile and absolutely pure, according to the annual report of James M. Caird, the chemist employed by the board of water commissioners, submitted to the board at its regular monthly meeting on Friday afternoon at the city hall. In his report which is extremely lengthy Mr. Caird states that during 1913-14 there were 1,608,063,140 gallons of water consumed in Kingston and during 1914-15 the amount was 1,557,162,700 gallons or a decrease this year of 50,900,440 gallons. This was an average daily consumption of 4,265,925 gallons, or a per capita consumption of 161 gallons per day.

Last year Kingston faced a water famine and but for a timely rain fall the city's water supply would have been exhausted. In order to avert the danger of a famine this year the water board has had the main dam at Cooper's Lake raised 18 inches, increasing the storage capacity 75,000,000 gallons and making the total storage capacity of Cooper's Lake 475,000,000 gallons. This is estimated by the board to give the city an additional three months supply of water. The raising of the height of the main dam at the lake of course meant the flooding of a large area of land which the board has secured by purchase.

Work on the new pipe line being laid from Stephan street to Broadway is being rapidly pushed forward and Superintendent Harrison reported that at the present time he has a gang of ninety-eight men at work laying the line of 12 inch pipe. When the new line is laid and connected up it is expected that it will greatly increase the water pressure on the high points on that side of Broadway.

The water board after reading the report of Chemist Caird believe that the problem of supplying the city with pure wholesome water has been solved; that by increasing the storage capacity of Cooper's Lake the danger of a water famine has been averted; and with the completion of the new 12 inch pipe line on the high points that the question of water pressure has been taken care of.

Mr. Caird's report showed that the raw water in the reservoirs was of good quality and that after it passed through the filters it became practically sterile and absolutely pure. At the close of his report he made several suggestions which he states if adopted would give Kingston one of the most up-to-date plants in the country. His suggestions were to install at least 4 additional filters so that the rate of filtration will not be excessive; the installation of a hot water heating system at the filter plant in place of the several stoves now in use; and the installation of a gas plant for lighting the building and for use in the laboratory.

Inspector O'Neil reported for April 125 inspections. New fixtures found installed as follows: 22 faucets; 10 baths, 17 toilets; 7 laundry trays, and 3 heaters, showing an increase in revenue per annum of $167. New buildings found and reported 6, and leaks found and repaired, 2.

Inspector Murphy reported 53 inspections. New fixtures found installed as follows: 10 faucets; 5 baths; 8 toilets; 4 laundry trays, and 1 heater, showing an increase in revenue per annum of $76.50. Builders notified and permits issued, 6.

Bills and claims against the board were read and referred to the proper committees.

The board then adjourned subject to the call of the chair.

Those present were President Dwyer and Commissioners Roach, Chandler, Hauck and Harrison.

COUNT CZAKY ORDERED BY WIFE TO GET JOB.

New York, May 8.—Count Kalman Czaky Koroszejhi and Adorjan, nephew of the Archbishop of Vienna, hereditary governor of a Hungarian province and a distant relative of Count Szechenyi, who married Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, has taken the dictum of his American wife, the former Mrs. Maud Howard Bryan, and has returned to New York after an absence of several years, to try and earn a living just like an ordinary American husband. According to the story that followed him here from San Francisco, the Count had come here with instructions to "make good." There is no intention on either side to remain permanently separated, much less seek a divorce. It is merely a mutual agreement that in America it is not fitting that a man should live on his wife's income.

The Count is not saying a word about his troubles and, as far as known, has not yet procured "his job."
